Widow of Nelson Seized Secretly, Grilled 5 Days

Widow of Gangster 'Won't Talk' About Pal's Identity.

Clegg Keeps Mum On Chicago Arrest

Girl May Be Charged With Aiding Cowley, Hollis Murderers.

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Mrs. Helen Gillis, first unofficial woman public enemy, was a Federal prisoner tonight.

The tiny widow of the notorious George (Baby Face) Nelson was seized here last Thursday, Federal authorities announced, a little more than 24 hours after the shattered body of her husband had been found on a muddy prairie near Niles Center last Wednesday—the posthumous victim of Agents Samuel P. Cowley and Herman E. Hollis, who sacrificed their lives in a game effort to capture him.

Long a consort of the Dillinger mobsters, the 94-pound girl has been questioned relentlessly as to the identity of the man who was with her and Nelson during the terrific gun battle in which the agents fell near suburban Barrington last Tuesday and concerning the whereabouts of the last of Dillinger's marksmen, John Hamilton.

Information Kept Secret.

Government interrogators declined to disclose what information, if any, she had furnished. She was still held at an unrevealed detention place here tonight.

H. H. Clegg, high official of the Department of Justice at Washington who is directing the hunt for the remnants of the gang in the metropolitan area, announced the 21-year-old widow was captured shortly after 10 p. m. last Thursday in Chicago.

He declined comment on whether the woman would be charged with being an accessory in the murder of the two Federal agents, but stated the arrest had been made on a bench warrant charging her with violation of a Wisconsin parole.

Mrs. Gillis, Jean Crompton and Marie Conforti were captured last April 22 in the Little Bohemia Lodge in the Wisconsin woods after the Dillinger thugs had escaped from a Government trap in a gun battle in which one Federal agent was killed. They pleaded guilty to harboring Dillinger at Madison, Wis., but were placed on probation.

That probation was revoked July 12, Clegg said, and an order issued for her arrest.

Taken Unwounded.

Asked where in Chicago the woman had been apprehended, Clegg declined to comment. He would not discuss the possibility she had surrendered. But he did say she had not been wounded.

If the usual procedure were followed, Clegg pointed out, Mrs. Gillis would be taken back to the Federal court at Madison for invocation of sentence.

MRS. HELEN GILLIS.

U. S. May Book Wife of Nelson As Murder Aid

At Present She's Charged Only With Violating Her Parole.

Mrs. Helen Gillis, young, 94-pound widow of "Baby Face" Nelson, whose arrest in Chicago on Thanksgiving Day leaked out yesterday, is charged now only with violating her probation.

But Attorney General Homer Cummings announced last night that the Federal Government is considering other charges against her, one for "complicity in murder."

The Attorney General said the Government had knowledge that Mrs. Gillis was with her husband and another man the night of November 27, when in a gun battle at Barrington, Ill., "Baby Face" and two Department of Justice agents, Samuel P. Crowley and Herman E. Hollis, were killed.

Nelson's Body Dumped.

After the battle, "Baby Face" was driven away and his body dumped off at Niles Center, Ill., Thanksgiving eve.

The fact that Mrs. Gillis was arrested on Thanksgiving Day was revealed yesterday by a Chicago newspaper and confirmed later in the day by Attorney General Cummings. How she was arrested, whether it was in company with a man, were questions that went unanswered. All that Cummings would say in this connection was that she had been "picked up" by Department of Justice agents.

Last spring, Mrs. "Baby Face," as the country's first woman public enemy came to be known, was one of the women with the Dillinger gang when they shot it out with Federal agents at the Little Bohemia roadhouse in Wisconsin.

Probation Revoked.

She and two other women were captured and tried on charges of harboring Dillinger. She was convicted, but was placed on probation

U. S. Contests Wampler Writ

Challenges Court's Freeing Convicted Prisoner on Habeas Corpus.

Philadelphia, Dec. 4 (AP).—A court's power to free a convicted prisoner on a writ of habeas corpus pending an appeal, was challenged by the Federal Government in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today in the case of Thomas M. Wampler, Washington attorney convicted of income tax evasion.

To grant judges such power would create a "travesty on justice," United States Attorney Bernard J. Flynn, of Baltimore, argued in pleading for reversal of Federal District Judge Albert Johnson's action in freeing Wampler from the Federal penitentiary at Lewisburg.

Flynn asked swift determination of the question involved to prevent opening of another "loophole for delay" and stop convicts "from walking the street" when" they should be in prison."

After serving three-fourths of his sentence of 18 months, Wampler was freed from the penitentiary in $5,000 bail pending disposition of an appeal from his conviction. In the interim, he was married.

The defense attorneys upheld Johnson's action, which Flynn said had "no warrant in law." The Government contended the sole purpose of the habeas corpus was to protect defendants from unlawful imprisonment prior to conviction.

Cotton Quota Gets Support Of Roosevelt

Bankhead Act, Despite Grumbling, Has Raised Prices, His Claim.

To Ask Relief for Small Producer if Vote in South Is Favorable.

By Leon Dure, Jr.
(Post Staff Writer).

Warm Springs, Ga., Dec. 4.—President Roosevelt tonight threw the full strength of the White House and his popularity in the Southland behind the Bankhead cotton control act, upon which several million growers will vote on December 14.

In a brief, formal statement, he announced that if the act is continued in force another year he will ask Congress to exempt from its provisions those who habitually grow no more than two bales—an estimated 600,000 growers.

At the same time, he let it be known that he considers the Bankhead act, despite widespread grumbling in the South, has been a success in cutting the huge cotton carry-over and thus lifting cotton close to its parity price.

Mr. Roosevelt's announcement was made at nightfall, after the markets had closed for the day. He drove his little open runabout to the press cottage on the Warm Springs Foundation, was persuaded to go in, and there, surrounded by newspapermen, children suffering from infantile paralysis and others, dictated this statement:

Helps Little Fellow.

"If the Bankhead act is continued in effect for another year, it is my purpose to recommend to the Congress an amendment granting an exemption for the full amount of his base production to each farmer who has an established base production of not more than two bales of cotton."

In the opinion of Mr. Roosevelt, it is the smallest producers of cotton that need the Government's help most. His action in promising to seek their exemption has the dual effect of eliminating much of the criticism of the act, which has come chiefly from the "little fellow," and of vastly simplifying the administration of the law.

The principles behind the Bankhead cotton act, which have now been extended to tobacco as well, admittedly are the most drastic the New Deal has applied in its crop-reduction campaign. Under the law, farmers are assigned compulsory quotas, based on former production, and are taxed at the "bottle neck" of the gin for all excess production.

In approving the continuance of the act, Mr. Roosevelt harks back to conditions a year and a half ago, when the Administration embarked on its program to bring crop prices back as far as possible to the "parity prices" that existed during the years immediately preceding the World War.

Price Has Gone Up.

At that time, the crop year of 1932, cotton was selling for about 5½ cents. The parity price—which means the estimated price farmers should get in relation to the cost of what they must buy—was about 13 cents.

Today the parity price is about 15½ cents, a slight increase caused by the general uplift in the cost of living. However, what impresses Mr. Roosevelt most is that cotton has jumped in that relatively short period to around 12½ cents. This

Goodrich, Firestone Stay Labor Election

Cincinnati, Dec. 4 (AP).—The B. F. Goodrich Co. and the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., both of Akron, Ohio, today asked the U. S. Filing of the petitions automatically stays the order of the National Relations Board, which had set the election for December 7.

It's an Old Spanish Custom— Asturias' Bride Will Stay One

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—"It's all a terrible misunderstanding. We've had no quarrel. The facts were misrepresented. There is going to be no divorce."

With vigorous shakes of her head, the beautiful Countess Covadonga, daughter of a wealthy Cuban merchant, today denied when she arrived on the Berengaria reports abroad that she was to separate from the eldest son of former King Alfonso, the former Prince of the Asturias who renounced his rights of succession to the old Spanish throne to marry the commoner.

Reticent at first, the countess finally turned aside the appeals of her sister and traveling companion, Mrs. John Arguelles, to be silent, and discussed the reports.

"Some one spread the report that I went to a dance and my husband told me if I went I needn't come back," she said. "That is not true. "I don't like to dance. We live a quiet life and our entertainment consists mostly of the theater, literature and conversation."

There was that other report—that she walked out of their Paris hotel and left the prince.

"Ridiculous," the countess said. "My mother was visiting us and just before she returned to Cuba she and I went away for a few days. When she sailed, I went at once back to our Paris home."

The countess, the former Edelmira Ignacia Adriana Sampredo, plans to return to Paris in two months.

On one occasion, when she and her sister held a whispered conversation on the ship deck in reply to an inquiry about her husband, the sister said, loud enough for others to hear:

"But he will be over here perhaps in a few weeks."

The countess, however, would not say whether the husband is going to visit her Cuban home.

Mother Gains Right to Fight On for Gloria

Mrs. Vanderbilt Is Called 'Foolish' for Being Seen With Blumenthal.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The way was cleared today for the higher court fight for custody of little Gloria Vanderbilt, heiress to millions.

At the same time, part of the record of the private hearing before Justice John F. Carew—who made the child a ward of his court—was made public, disclosing for the first time the nature of some of the court's criticism of Gloria's mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt. She sought in vain a writ of habeas corpus from Justice Carew to regain custody of her daughter from her sister-in-law, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

Referring to testimony showing that Mrs. Vanderbilt had been seen frequently in night clubs squired by A. C. Blumenthal, wealthy and estranged husband of Peggy Fears, the actress, Justice Carew said:

Desires Finer Future.

"I think it was foolish for this young woman to be running around with Mr. Blumenthal, who is a married man. I am not saying that it is bad, that there is anything evil in it, but it is very foolish."

The justice also said he "hesitated very much" to believe some of the stories of Mrs. Vanderbilt's private life as related by discharged domestics—disclosures that caused him to close the hearing to the public.

In charging the counsel to draw up his instructions after the hearing before him was terminated, the transcript of the record showed, Justice Carew said:

"I would be very glad if the

Machete-Slashed Body Of American Found

Santiago, Cuba, Dec. 4 (AP).—The machete-slashed body of an American identified as James McNenny, formerly of Jersey City, N. J., was found today near the town of Velasco.

Arms Makers Tried to Ease Geneva Curb

(Associated Press.)

A concerted effort by gun makers the world over to modify the 1925 Geneva convention for the control of international arms shipments was revealed yesterday as the Senate Munitions Investigation Committee reopened its hearings.

The committee was told that high Government officials, including Herbert Hoover when he was Secretary of Commerce, had talked with arms makers prior to the 1925 Geneva arms conference. No intimation was given, however, that officials knew of the effort to modify the convention.

With three prominent arms and munitions manufacturers seated in a semicircle before him, Chairman Nye, of the committee, by questioning and through the introduction of documentary evidence, wrote these developments into the day's record:

Gun makers of many nations held a meeting in Paris four months before the Geneva arms parley to decide what changes they wanted made in the treaty as already drafted.

Hoover Confers.

Mr. Hoover, as Secretary of Commerce, invited a representative of the Winchester Arms Co. to attend a conference on the economic phases of the arms conference, at which about 25 persons were in attendance.

H. F. Beebe, manager of the Winchester Arms Co., had the help of Representative John Q. Tilson, then Republican leader of the House, in contacting interested State and War Department officials.

With Frank C. Nichols, of the Colt Patent Fire Arms Co., Beebe called on Allan Dulles, chief of the State Department's Near Eastern Division, and on Brig. Gen. Golden L. H. Ruggles, who later was a delegate to the Geneva convention.

Beebe insisted to the committee that he then had no knowledge that Ruggles would attend the Geneva gathering as the representative of the United States.

Meeting in Paris.

The Paris meeting was revealed to have resulted in the preparation of a memorandum urging radical alteraton of the arms control plan evolved by the League of Nations for action at the then approaching Geneva session.

At the Hoover meeting, Beebe said, a report was drawn up, but its content was not revealed. He testified that he could not recall whether any manufacturers of war munitions were present.

With the committee seated at an elevated, horseshoe desk, resembling a judicial tribunal, Beebe, S. M. Stone, of the Colt company, and Irenee du Pont, of the Delaware powder making concern, sat grouped below.

Questioned by Nye.

Nye questioned first one and then another, with most of his interrogations directed at Stone, and at Beebe.

However, at the outset of the afternoon session, du Pont interrupted as Nye was about to put the first question, to call attention

Drastic Decrees Hit Traitors to the Soviet

Moscow, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Soviet government struck another blow at terrorism today by issuing new decrees to accelerate the trials of persons charged with offenses against the Bolshevik regime.

The move came as 71 "White Russians," arrested as an aftermath of the assassination of Sergei Kiroff, secretary of the central executive committee, awaited trial.

The executive committee's decree amended the criminal codes of all constituent republics of the Soviet Union to eliminate delay in the trial and execution of accused terrorists.

It required that investigations of such offenses must be completed in ten days, indictments handed to the accused the day before the trial opens, and the trial be conducted without prosecuting or defense attorneys.

Appeals to a higher court and applications to the central executive committee for clemency were ruled inadmissible. Death sentences were required to be imposed immediately upon conviction.

Whether the "White Russians" arrested as the republic mourned Kiroff's death were directly implicated in the official's assassination was not disclosed. They were rounded up here and in Leningrad and held for investigation.

Meanwhile Leonid Nicolieff, named by Soviet authorities as the actual assassin, was still being questioned. No announcement was made of the probable disposition of his case.

Kiroff's body lay in state in the Column Hall of historic Union House. His ashes are to be buried in the shadow of the Kremlin wall following a national funeral in Red Square Thursday.

Throughout the Republic, manifestations of intense feeling over the assassination of Kiroff continued. Workers' meetings voiced their approval of the government's removal of the head of the commissariat of home affairs and six of his assistants, who were responsible for the safety of the Soviet leader. The officials are to be tried on charges of negligence.

Coast Guard and Liner Join Hunt in Pacific Near Islands.

Ship's Location As Yet Unknown

Clearing Weather Spurs Hope for Safety of 3 Airmen.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Honolulu, Dec. 4.—Lost in a storm-driven sky, Flight Lieut. Charles T. Ulm was forced to bring his monoplane down on an undetermined spot in the Pacific Ocean today after his gasoline tanks went dry in his flight from Oakland, Calif.

Farntic S O S calls from the Star of Australia gave graphic warnings that the three daring fliers had missed their goal and sought immediate aid from the perils they faced.

A flock of Army planes took to the air immediately in rescue attempts. Coast Guard boats put out to sea under forced draught, and an ocean liner turned from its course to pick up the aviators.

Location Unknown.

Improving weather conditions, however, were regarded as favoring the lost aviators. Overcast skies which had shrouded the islands had cleared, the sea was calm, and the Weather Bureau said the favorable conditions probably extended for several hundred miles out to sea.

The sarchers were hindered by the fact that the exact point where Lieut. Ulm and his two companions were forced to alight was unknown—whether they had passed over the islands or had fallen short of their goal.

"Will land in the sea," said a brief message from the plane at 8:30 a. m. today, Hawaii time (2 p. m. E. S. T.) as Ulm appealed to the Army and Navy to stand by.

Gasoline Exhausted.

Their gasoline exhausted, Lieut. Ulm and his companions, Copilot George Littlejohn and Navigator-Radio Operator J. L. Skilling, came to the ocean's surface a short time later.

But the mystery of their location, Commander E. W. Todd, commander of the fleet air base at Pearl Harbor, said, seriously handicapped the searchers.

Commander Todd hurriedly dispatched nine planes southward and prepared to send a like number to search in a northeasterly direction.

"We have very little gasoline left," said a message from the plane. "We need the beacon urgently. We do not want to give the S O S. Please tell shake them on the beacon."

This was interpreted by fliers here as indicating Lieut. Ulm was far off his course and could not pick up the beacon direction signals, which were being broadcast constantly.

Later came another terse message

Mystery Witness' 'Key Story' Indicts Army Buying Methods

Evidence of Alleged Irregular Dealings of U. S. Officials and Private Agents Spurs New Grand Jury Probe; Garnett Aid Sits In.

A sensational tale of alleged irregular dealings between representatives of the War Department and agents seeking Government business yesterday was unfolded before a House Military Affairs sub-committee by Frank Speicher, long-missing "mystery" witness in the Army purchasing inquiry.

New light thrown on the investigation by Speicher and others last night was said in an authoritative quarter definitely to point the way to a new grand jury inquiry into War Department purchasing methods, supplementing the one conducted a year ago.

On instructions from United States Attorney Leslie C. Barnett, his assistant, Alvin Krauss, sat through closed hearings of the subcommittee yesterday. David A. Pine, chief assistant to Garnett, conferred at length with the subcommittee Monday.

No indictment was returned by the grand jury last year, but a report flaying alleged "lobbying" practices in and around the War Department was prepared. With the reappearance of Speicher, with a "key" story concerning Army purchasing methods, it was said a more incisive inquiry is planned.

Speicher, short and heavy-set, is a representative of a leak-proof tire and tube concern which had business with the Government. Not being under subpena, he left Washington after preliminary talks with Justice Department operatives last year. He has been widely sought since, and was located in New York only recently.

Foulois Matter Impends.

A sworn statement was taken by Justice agents, in colaboration with Garnett, and it is this 50-page statement, allegedly involving a high-ranking Army officer, that is the basis for renewed hearings now being conducted by the special House Military Affairs Subcommittee.

Pending return of the chairman of the subcommittee, Representative William N. Rogers, of New Hampshire, members are sworn to strict secrecy regarding proceedings. It was learned, however, that a complete transcript of the executive hearings will be turned over to Garnett's office, as the probable basis for the new grand jury inquiry.

The subcommittee, appointed by a special House resolution, automatically goes out of existence midnight January 2, but members plan to seek an extension and another appropriation on the basis of new vistas opening up.

Borah Battles Couzens Over Party Discord

One-Time Pals Hurl Bitter Charges in Latest Rift Within G. O. P.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Emergence of a dramatic personal feud between Senators William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, one-time close friends, yesterday became the latest development in the intraparty fight raging among the Republicans.

The spark was set off by Senator Couzens, one of the wealthiest men in the Senate and a lone wolf who has voted with the progressives in his party as often as he has sided with the conservatives. The Michigan Senator suggested that Senator Borah, who wants the party reorganized, accept the Republican chairmanship and write a new platform.

"If he wants a platform, I'll give him one," retorted the leonine-headed Idahoan. "I'll give him a platform headed by a plank to tax tax-exempt securities."

Senator Borah's cryptic remark was taken as a reference to the widespread belief that a large part of Senator Couzens' fortune is invested in municipal bonds, exempt from Federal income taxes.

Senator Couzens met this onslaught by asserting he would vote for such a proposal but he had never heard the Idahoan suggest it in the Senate. He asserted that "in a battle of words I haven't

Death Boosts Traffic Fatalities Here to Within Four of Record

Washington's traffic fatalities for 1934 rose to 119, only four less than the all-time record of 123, when an aged man was injured fatally by an automobile late yesterday.

Earlier in the day two young women were hurt critically by street cars in different sections of the District.

Harrier Kramer, 70, of 2339 Eighteenth street northwest, suffered a fractured skull when he was struck by an automobile as he attempted to cross the street on Massachusetts avenue northwest, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. He was taken to Emergency Hospital, where he died a few hours later.

John H. Earl, driver of the automobile which struck Mr. Kramer, was held pending a coroner's inquest. He gave an address in the 400 block Tennessee avenue northeast.

Miss Adrienne Hayes, 16-year-old Roosevelt High School student, who lives at 1429 Taylor street northwest, was struck and dragged several feet by a Capital Transit Co. car at Fourteenth and Upshur streets northwest. At Emergency Hospital physicians held slight hope for her recovery.

When her automobile collided with a street car in the 3300 block Nicholas avenue southeast, Mrs. Meta R. Marks, 25, of the 1700 block Seventeenth street southeast, suffered a possible skull fracture, severe cuts and possible internal injuries. She was taken to St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

3 Towns Razed By Earthquake

Communications Broken, Casualties Unknown in Honduras.

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Dec. 4 (AP). Meager reports reaching Tegucigalpa through shattered communications systems today indicated an earthquake in central Honduras had done widespread damage.

Three towns, official reports from Sinuapa said, probably were destroyed, while at least six others suffered serious damage.

There was no indication as to how many of the 6,500 persons living in the three towns reported destroyed—San Jorge, La Encarnacion and San Fernando—lost their lives or suffered injury.

The report from Sinuapa gave no details of the disaster, and government officials tonight were striving to secure further information.

A report from San Salvador said the Honduran village of Sant Rita, in the Copan area, also was destroyed.

Other cities hard hit were Gracias and Naranjito, in the western section of the country; the colonial town of Ilama, and the city of Comayagua, only 60 miles from Tegucigalpa.

Everywhere, the reports indicated, the earth tremors spread panic among the populace.

Evidence that the quake also shook the northern banana region was seen in reports from Truxillo and Yoro that the shocks were felt there.

Chamber Order Bars Town Hall Lecture Series

Auditorium's Use Denied; Ticket Sale Given as Reason.

Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, was referring to America's economic system when he made that statement Sunday night in the course of his lecture opening the Town Hall of Washington. But, wholly unknown to himself, he was uttering prophecy of a different character as well.

For yesterday it was revealed that the United States Chamber of Commerce has ordered a change in the Town Hall itself, a change of meeting places. Last Sunday's forum, first of a series of 20 which had been scheduled for the chamber's auditorium, was also the last to be held there unless the hosts back down from their position.

The ban was applied because tickets are being sold for the meetings, contrary to the spirit of an oral agreement for use of the hall, said John M. Redpath, executive manager of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Huston Thompson, president of Town Hall, and Mrs. Richard V. Oulahan, director and secretary, have a different story, but they are not ready to tell it yet.

Leftist Tendencies.

It has to do with the leftist tendencies of some of the scheduled speakers—fellows like Norman Thomas and A. A. Berle, jr.—not coinciding precisely with the more conservative element in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

"We will make a statement after the executive committee has met and discussed the matter," Mr. Thompson said. There has been no meeting yet, he continued, because one member is not available and his presence is necessary because he helped negotiate the agreement for us of the auditorium.

He did not go so far as to say, however, that the turn of affairs is proving embarrassing because it has been advertised extensively that all 20 discussions would be held in the chamber auditorium. Speakers are scheduled through April 21.

Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institute, is supposed to speak next Sunday on "The Ethics of Capitalism."

The "sense of impending change" first hit the air last Friday when Mr. Redpath sent Mrs. Oulahan and Miss Grace Roper, associate director, notice that the auditorium would not be available after the opening Forum Sunday.

Protest Decision.

Mrs. Oulahan and Miss Roper sent almost three hours in Mr. Redpath's office the following day, Saturday, vainly protesting the decision. To his explanation that building rules forbid its use by money making organizations, they replied that the lecturers' list probably had more to do with the edict than financial complications.

The executive manager, who is also executive officer of the building's board of trustees, would not deny yesterday that the political color and texture of the speakers had something to do with the cancelation. He insisted, however, that the main reason is that regulations prohibit the use of facilities for money making purposes.

"I can't go into that," he said, upon being reminded that Town Hall of Washington is a nonprofit making corporation.

Carry Case to Strawn.

On Monday, Redpath said, Mrs. Oulahan and Miss Roper returned to carry their case to Silas Strawn, former president of the chamber, who was in Washington for the day. With them were Mr. Thompson and Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education and chairman of the executive committee.

Mr. Strawn assumed a hands off policy, saying the responsibility lay with Mr. Redpath. A short time later the latter received a telegram from David A. Skinner, chamber secretary, who had given permission for use of the auditorium, authorizing termination of the agreement. That was followed by an air mail letter from Henry I. Harriman, president, giving his sanction.

Both Harriman and Skinner are attending a divisional meeting in San Francisco.

The only reason Town Hall was permitted to take the auditorium Sunday, Mr. Redpath said, was that time was too short to give notice. Many were turned away at the premiere, which was attended by more than 1,000 persons. Single admissions were $1 and season membership tickets are sold for $15. For use of the auditorium $30 was charged, said the executive manager, just enough to pay for lighting, janitor service, etc.

Regardless of the outcome, the forum series will be carried through, Mr. Thompson promised.

77,716,000 Coins Made By Mints in November

Federal mints turned out three times more coins in November than in all of 1933, according to the Associated Press.

The November output was 77,716,000 coins, with a value of $4,976,820. The 1933 production was 23,109,250 coins valued at $13,136,225, but 758,000 pieces were gold, valued at $12,035,000, and now no longer in circulation.

Between You and Me

By Raymond Clapper

ONCE more the Senate may serve as a national political hatching ground, this time in connection with the effort to rejuvenate the Republican Party.

Senator Borah opened up with his call for reorganization of the Republican national committee. Most of the vocal Republicans left are in the Senate. In that open forum, they can get the floor and can, if they have anything to say, be certain of national attention.

Republicans will constitute only a handful of the Senate in the coming Congress. Of the 96 Senators only 24 are listed as Republican. Several of those are Republicans in name only, being, like Senator Johnson, as strongly pro-Roosevelt as any good Democrat on the other side of the aisle.

Yet, small as it, this corporal's guard is about all the party has to look to.

True, the party machinery is conrolled by a small group of ultra - conservatives, including Charles D. Hilles, of New York, a smiling, back-stage harmonizer; J. Henry Roraback, of Connecticut, big-framed and immovable; Dan Pomeroy, of New Jersey, and Mark Requa, of California, who holds down the Western front. Their executive is Chairman Henry P. Fletcher. During the recent campaign they directed the party machinery and the policy as well though the latter was widely ignored by many party candidates. Those who stood with the national committee in last-ditch opposition to the New Deal were defeated—men like Reed in Pennsylvania, Fess in Ohio, Patterson in Missouri and Hatfield in West Virginia.

The Hilles group won a costly victory at Chicago last June when it put Fletcher in as National chairman and set the party head-on against the New Deal. This action was unpopular among party leaders, especially in the West. It is even more unpopular now.

This leaves a wide-open field for the revolutionists and they are moving in. Borah's blast was only the beginning. Senator McNary, the Republican Senate leader, who refused to participate in the Republican congressional campaign because he was out of sympathy with the Hilles management, is back in Washington making peace overtures to progressive Republicans.

The Republican leaders who have the vocal spots are for the most part Senators who are demanding a new deal within the party; not those who upheld the hands of the Hilles-Fletcher group. It includes not only Borah and McNary, but Vandenberg, who won reelection by keeping regular Republican speakers out of Michigan and embracing part of the New Deal, and Senator James Couzens.

As yet, however, there is no revolutionist bloc. The revolutionists are badly divided among themselves. Thus far each is his own prima donna. Borah wants the national committee reorganized at once. Vandenberg wants to let it alone until the party evolves its policies in the course of congressional action. Couzens and Vandenberg, both from Michigan, don't get along very well now. Couzens refused to help Vandenberg in the recent campaign. And although there was a time when Couzens, one of the richest men in the Senate, was ready to finance Borah for the Presidency, he wouldn't do it now. One day at lunch ten years ago, Couzens put his proposition to Borah, who was to think it over and prepare a personal platform. He has never mentioned the subject to Conzens since.

Although each man is tooting his own horn at this stage, the common purpose of unseating the Old Guard now in the national committee saddle may bring them together eventually. They also have their eyes on the younger Republican workers out in the country who have chafed under the discipline of the elders. Between these two forces, men like Hilles, who have dominated the party backstage for a generation, are likely to be crushed at the next national convention.

If such a revolution develops from the senatorial wing of the party, it will not be the first time that the Senate has been the take-off ground for a major action.

It was in the Senate that the fight which broke Woodrow Wilson began and was nursed. Borah, Johnson, Jim Reed, Philander Knox, Brandegee and others in the famous Battalion of Death spoke day after day during the Paris peace conference. If the Senate was not in session they issued statements to the press. They made dashes out into the country to speak. Starting with national sentiment strongly against them, they gradually turned the tide against the League of Nations and everything identified with the Wilson program.

In 1920 it was the Senate Republicans who took charge of the Republican national convention at Chicago and put over one of their own members, Harding.

The attacks which made Herbert Hoover squirm and which had much to do with breaking his Administration came largely out of the Senate.

Senator Bronson Cutting may have difficulty in obtaining an election certificate to present for the new session of Congress. Running as a pro-Roosevelt Republican, but opposed by an Administration-backed Democrat, Representative Dennis Chavez, Cutting nosed through on the first count. Chavez is preparing for a recount, but meantime wires are being pulled in New Mexico to hold up Cutting's election certificate. This would prevent him from taking his seat January 3.

One racket reported in some Eastern cities consists of telephoning business men and asking them to contribute to an alleged benefit organization for Government employes. The solicitor delicately suggests that lists of contributors are given to friends in some of the Government departments and slyly hints that tax papers of such benefactors will be treated kindly. Another party then goes around to pick up the contribution. They say it is surprising how many times it works.

Col. Roosevelt Calls on G.O.P. To 'Go Liberal'

Plea Is Interpreted as Bid for Harmony Between Party Factions.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., asserted tonight the Republican Party must build itself up as a group of "constructive liberals" and forecast "disastrous" results unless the party were reorganized.

Addressing an open letter to members of the Republican national committee, the former Governor General of the Philippines declared "these are times when what is done or left undone may make or break our country and our party."

The letter, published in the National Republican Club Review, analyzed the results of the November elections and his conclusions from them.

Choices for Party.

"There would seem," Col. Roosevelt continued, "to be before our party three choices:

"1. To go ultra-conservative, which I believe would spell disaster to the country and death to the party;

"2. To go to the extreme type of agrarian radicalism, which I believe is unsound economically and would ultimately bring ruin on the country;

"3. To reorganize along modern and progressive lines, building ourselves up as constructive liberals—liberal in that we would search for solutions to every problem with an open mind, recognizing the failures in our present social structure and striving to correct them; constructive to the extent that we would abandon no sound policies and that we would demand to see where the end would be before we embarked on untried schemes."

Cites Liberal Victories.

Col. Roosevelt recalled the national committee's analysis of the elections, claiming a larger percentage of the votes than the party received in 1932.

"Roughly speaking," he contended, "the Republicans were defeated in all States where their candidates were not credited by the people as liberal and constructive and in sympathy with the needs of the average individual.

"The people want liberal, constructive leadership and they carry in their minds a fixed picture of just what certain persons represent. If the Republican Party wishes to regain power nationally, it must furnish new leadership locally, especially in those great Eastern and Middle Western States which have heretofore provided the largest share of the Republican vote.

Bid for Harmony.

"The people must feel that those in control of the party are in close sympathy with their aspirations and desires, and do not represent reaction. Unless this is done the results will be disastrous, for it matters little who controls the machine if the machine can gather no votes to support its candidates at election."

Col. Roosevelt's letter was interpreted in political circles as an effort to avert an intraparty clash between "Old Guard" and extreme left-wing factions.

He was represented as believing that rank and file members of the party also desired to avoid a widespread dispute on these issues and that the majority of the party fitted his "constructive liberal" classification.

21-Year-Old Texan Collects Clocks

Owns 13 Worth $1,200, for Which He Paid $50.

Austin, Tex. (U.P.).—Clocks—old clocks, new clocks, grandfather clocks, imported clocks, a calendar clock, and the clock the mouse runs up—all are contained in the collection of 21-year-old Marvin Wright, here, whose lifetime hobby has been to collect rare timepieces and see what makes them tick.

Wright has 13 clocks in all, five in the living room, three in the dining room, one in a bedroom, and four noisy models in the garage. He began at 3 and has continued experimentation with clocks until his collection is worth more than $1,200, although its net cost was less than $50.

The perpendicular mouse clock is numbered from bottom to top, with a tiny white mouse pointing the correct time. The piece is about 25 years old. Wright owns a handmade French clock, imported to Texas while the territory was a Mexican possession. Five others accompanied it. One burned in the old Texas State capitol. One has disappeared, and the others are in private collections here.

In addition to his knack for keeping old clocks in order, Wright is recognized as a skillful woodworker. He formerly studied engineering at the University of Texas here.

Ear Held Beetle Larva.

Hanford, Cal. (U.P.).—For days one of Dr. W. C. Williams' patients complained of sleeplessness, pains in his neck, throat and side of his face. Williams investigated, diagnosed the case as caused by a foreign body in the patient's ear and set to work. After three irrigations out came the larva of a common carpet beetle. How it got into the ear, the patient did not know.

The Chicago Evening American in a copyrighted article this afternoon on Mrs. Nelson's arrest said it had learned she "had not talked."

The paper also said it had learned that for ten days before the gun flight, Federal men had been watching a cottage in the Lake Geneva, Wis., resort region.

"Several hours before the battle at Barrington," the article continued, "two agents approached the cottage. As they did so, Mrs. Gillis and a man whose identity is unknown fled by a rear door and escaped in a car toward Chicago.

"The agents were unable to give chase, but they learned the license number of the car, an Illinois license, and telephoned Chicago headquarters.

"Two cars were rushed out no the Northwest highway to intercept the car. One contained Cowley and Hollis; the other two, other Federal men."

Portland Tong Opens Shrine At Portland

Firecrackers Roar, Drums Beat in Festivities at Pacific City.

Portland, Oreg. (U.P.).—To the music of cymbals and drums, the deafening roar of 65,000 firecrackers and the ancient symbolism of the lion dance, Portland's Chinatown dedicated its new Gee How Oak Tan Association's headquarters. Chinese came from all over Oregon, Washington and California for the celebration, one of the most elaborate held here in 50 years.

The association numbers about 400 Portland Chinese, both American and foreign-born, who are members of the Chin Woo Yuen family tong. Heading the list of Chin dignitaries who came for the dedication was Chin Doon Puk, San Francisco, president of the Chin Woo Yuens in America.

More than 3,000 years ago the family came into being, when three men knelt before their great god, Di Soon, and swore they would be brothers. Today their descendants make the Chin Woo Yuen family one of the largest. The Portland branch is one of the three largest in the United States, and the biggest in the city.

Di Soon, so legend says, started in life as a farmer and lived so righteously and was so kind that even the birds and beasts aided him in tilling the soil. Di Soon's reputation reached the mighty Emperor of China, Do Yew, and on investigating he stepped aside and made Di Soon ruler of the kingdom, the tale goes.

A huge hand-carved joss idol of the god, 200 years old, is a shrine in the Gee How Oak Tan Association rooms. Here the East and West have met, because small electric lights twinkle continually on the idol.

much chance with Borah," and added that "for 40 years Senator Borah has had nothing but words and I can not understand why anyone should take him seriously."

"Who is Senator Borah to shout liberalism?" the Michigan Republican continued. "Check it up and you'll find he never voted in his life for a liberal for President."

Earlier in the day Senator Couzens revealed that in 1924 he had offered to finance a presidential campaign for Senator Borah. He said "It was a good thing he didn't accept because had he been elected it would have been a catastrophe for the country."

Old Guard Unshaken.

Although Senator Borah gained another supporter for his plan for immediate reorganization and liberalization of the Republican Party in the person of Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, it was beginning to appear that the Old Guard wing would continue to dominate its machinery for the present.

So well intrenched does the Old Guard appear that it seems an impossible task for those supporting Senator Borah to force a meeting of the Republican national committee in the near future. So far not only have members of the national committee shied away from the Borah proposal, but some of the progressives appear unenthusiastic and the "Young Turk" faction of the party has kept outside the fight.

During the day a letter sent to members of the national committee by Theodore Roosevelt, jr., pleading for liberalization of the party policies, was made public. But "young Teddy" did not suggest an immediate reorganization or the ousting of Chairman Henry P. Fletcher. He made no reference to the controversy stirred up by Senator Borah.

McNary Shies at Battle.

Senate Republican Leader Charles L. McNary returned to the Capital, but declined to take part in the controversy, although he exhibited coldness at the time Mr. Fletcher was selected as party chairman. It was learned, however, that he proposed to invite all Republican factions in the Senate, including even the Progressive La Follette and the Farmer-Labor Shipstead, to party conferences.

Gov. Pinchot, accompanied by his wife, called on Senator Borah. On leaving, the Pennsylvania Progressive asserted he believed the Idahoan "is right in his demand that the Republican Party should unite behind a thoroughly progressive platform."

"Obviously the leadership behind the revitalized Republican Party must be men and not money," he added. "I believe the Republican Party will come back and I see no reason why this should not be done in 1936."

Borah to Continue Fight.

Senator Borah expressed determination to continue with his fight for a reorganization of his party. Even though he can not move many members of the Republican national committee, who hold office until 1936, he plans to build a back-fire behind them by appealing to the youth of the party.

The Idahoan today will receive a delegation of "young Republicans" from Pennsylvania and on December 13 will carry the fight into the home territory of Charles D. Hilles, New York national committeeman and one of the stand-pat old guard. On that day Senator Borah will reply to Monday's statement by Chairman Fletcher in a speech to the Young Republican Clubs of New York.

Interest, however, centered in the bitter exchanges between Senators Borah and Couzens. Aside from bringing to the surface a feud between the two men which, it is reported, had its genesis during the heated debate in the closing days of Congress last spring, the incident was regarded as indicating that middle-of-the-road Republicans lacked enthusiasm for Senator Borah's program.

"I suggest that those who are supporting Senator Borah's proposal that Mr. Fletcher resign, offer Mr. Borah the chairmanship of the Republican national committee," asserted Senator Couzens.

Substitute Program Needed.

He contended that while not all the Rosevelt policies have worked, he did not propose to assume a purely destructive attitude. If the Republicans wished successfully to oppose President Roosevelt, they must offer a substitute program, he added.

"I invite Senator Borah to suggest a platform for what he believes would be an ideal Republican Party," he added.

Later, when he was told about Senator Borah's proposal to tax tax-exempt securities, Senator Couzens said he gladly would support a constitutional amendment to make this possible, but not being a constitutional lawyer, such as Senator Borah, he had not drafted such a measure. Meanwhile, an opportunity to cast such a vote has not come, he said.

After flaying the Idahoan, Senator Couzens observed that "the weakness of Senator Borah in this matter is that he has nothing but words."

Mitchell to Get White House Bid

White House hospitality will be extended, as during the Hoover administration, to the newly elected Negro Democratic member of the House of Representatives, Arthur H. Mitchell, of Illinois, Mrs. Roosevelt announced yesterday at her press conference.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been asked whether Mitchell, who defeated the Republican Negro member of the House, Oscar De Priest, of Chicago, would be given equal treatment.

"What has happened in the past will continue to happen," she replied. "There will be no change."

Convicted of Fraud, Man Gets 5 Years

Alleged Ex-German Agent Sought 'Treasure Island.'

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 4 (AP).—A man listed in court records as Dr. Armgard Karl Graves, who said he was a former German secret service agent, today was convicted of obtaining money by false representations and was sentenced to five years in the State penitentiary.

The 60-year-old German was convicted of obtaining $1,500 from Clarence Saunders, Memphis merchant, by falsely representing that it was to be used to finance an expedition to the coast of Haiti to uncover $3,000,000 in gold supposedly buried there.

The conviction came after the defendant took the witness stand to claim he once uncovered 12,000 pounds of gold at the "Treasure Island."

Doubling Force Of Tax Sleuths Is Considered

By Robert C. Albright.

Doubling of the Internal Revenue Bureau's field investigative force, in a drive to collect $75,000,000 more in Federal levies now draining through tax loopholes, was seriously considered yesterday by a special House Ways and Means subcommittee.

The proposal was placed before House inquisitors by Robert H. Jackson, general counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau, and a corps of Treasury tax experts. Final action was withheld by the subcommittee, but individual members indorsed the plan.

Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, chairman of the subcommittee which is studying the entire tax structure with a view to revision of administrative features, said he believed that the bureau has uncovered a substantial new tax source.

Economy cuts in the Treasury's staff of revenue investigators in recent years have reduced the field force to a point where only 50 per cent of the cases referred to them by the Washington office for inquiry can be followed up, experts testified.

"Not Economy," Says Hill.

"I don't think it is economy for the Bureau of the Budget to cut down that kind of a working force," Chairman Hill commented. "It seems to me that is a misconception of economy."

Treasury officials pointed out that even under the present system of limited investigation, about $220,000,000 in "lost" revenue is collected annually by the present check-up on 50 per cent of the larger returns.

By doubling the investigating staff they do not expect to collect twice that amount, but they insist that $75,000,000 more is a reasonable estimate of what might be realized. To bring this about, they told the sub-committee, an additional expenditure of only $3,000,000 would be necessary for staff expansion.

Trained new investigators would be sent into the field to work under the 38 regional agents now functioning, and the scope of inquiry would be broadened.

Under the prevailing system, the Treasury Department relays to regional agents all corporate tax cases where $125,000 gross income was reported, but no taxable gain shown, and all returns of $75,000 gross income and only a slight taxable gain. Individuals reporting a $35,000 net income and no taxable gain also are included. Regional officers weed out the least promising cases and refer the rest to staff investigators.

Survey to Be Widened.

In its effort to increase the volume of returns on the existing income tax structure, Chairman Hill said the sub-committee may consider the advisability of bringing a wider range of the tax-paying public's returns under the close scrutiny of a Treasury agent.

Earlier yesterday, Representative Frank Crowther, minority member of the subcommittee, expressed impatience to get at broader tax questions. "These studies are valuable, of course," he said, "but it's just 'pop-gun' stuff compared to the problem of $425,000,000 in expiring excise levies that the Administration will seek to reenact, and other new taxes they probably will propose.

"If we must reenact taxes to this amount and levy new ones, I hope to persuade the committee that the humane way to do it is through a manufacturers' sales tax of the sort proposed two years ago."

Kentucky Tobacco Sets High Record

Lexington Market Opens at Peak Price Since 1929 Sales.

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 4 (AP).—The highest average price for the opening day's market since 1929—$20.95 per 100—was paid for burley tobacco here today as the 1934 crop went on sale.

In recording an average price described as meeting the expectations of a majority of warehousemen and farmers, the loose leaf burley market here, the largest in the world, distributed $181,748.24 to the growers who were willing to cast their lost with the opening auction.

Russian, 150, Claims To Be Oldest Man

Inhabitant of Kiudgi, in Russian Georgia, Says Distinction Is His.

New York (AP).—Who is the oldest man in the world? Since the death of Zaro Agha, the ancient Turk, who said he was 156, candidates for his honors have sprung up around the world.

Abkhasian Khapara Khiuta, who lives in the village of Kiudgi, in Russian Georgia, says he is 150.

Khiuta made the claim in challenging the position of Artemy Laguiashvili, another Georgian, who had put his age at 146.

Somewhat in the rear is Francisco Antonio Araujo Lima, a black from the Cape Verde Islands, now living in Portugal. He got in his claim first, but could count only 132 years.

News stories from abroad told that many parts of the Soviet Union today were producing aged claimants for longevity honors, but that Georgia, first in the field, was hotly resentful.

Now it seems that Georgia is the seat of most of the Soviet health resorts because of its mild climate and the great variety of elevations offered by its high mountains, and other claimants point a scornful finger at this fact. Laguiashvili, a resident of Kumissa, Georgia, pretends to remember when the Russians captured Georgia in 1801. He walks erectly and does light work without exhaustion. He has been married three times and has nine children, the oldest 80.

Khiuta not only said that he was four years older than Laguiashvili, but produced a son he claimed was 90 years old. The entire population of Khiuta's village rose to the defense of his claim, but just as steadfastly the villagers of Kumissia stood by Laguiashvili.

Commission Checks Dates.

Thereupon a scientific commission from Tiflis set forth to examine both men and to check up on their historical recollections. In both cases the scientists found the old men had the dates and facts correct about events they said they had witnessed.

Lima is reputed to have landed in Portugal from the Cape Verde Islands as a comparative youth of 75, and to have won fame in his adopted land as a guitar player, frequently playing at the royal court in the days of the monarchy. King Charles I was godfather at his confirmation as a Catholic and afterward paid him a monthly allowance. With the advent of the republican regime, old Lima disappeared and had been almost forgotten until a Lisbonite with a long memory discovered him playing a guitar at a country festival in northern Portugal. He had been living in semi-retirement as a passive non-acceptor of the new regime.

His rediscoverer reports that old Lima showed legal documents of his identity and a birth certificate dated 1802. It is understood that the Portugese government is considering establishing a small pension to help Lima get along, now that he confesses to "feeling old."

Fish Advocates Settling Bonus In 5 Payments

(Associated Press.)

Representative Fish (Republican), New York, suggested last night in a statement that instead of paying the $2,200,000,000 bonus in a lump sum Congress provide for its payment in five $440,000,000 annual installments.

"This plan could probably be handled without causing serious consequences from inflation, such as further depreciation of the dollar and impairing the credit of the United States," he said.

"I have no patience with the proposal of Senator Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, that the bonus be paid only to needy war veterans. The face is that over 90 per cent of them are in real need or in debt."

Fish said the statement of the incoming Congress was virtually unanimous in favor of doing away with interest payments on loans that already had been made on the adjusted service certificates.

The new worker said he led the fight on the Republican side against the bonus in the last Congress because he felt it would send the country off the gold standard, impair the currency and cause inflation.

Since then, he added, the country has gone off the gold standard, currency has depreciated and the cost of living has been increased.

"It is apparent that there is an overwhelming sentiment for payment of the bonus immediately which can only be checked by determined opposition or a veto from the White House," he said.

Board Cancels Its Code Ruling In Press Case

(Associated Press.)

The Labor Relations Board last night temporarily, at least, set aside its decision ordering the San Francisco Call-Bulletin to reinstate Dean S. Jennings, a rewrite man, who claimed he was forced to resign because of newspaper guild activity.

The board, in a brief statement, said the case had been reopened at the request of Blackwell Smith, acting general counsel for the NRA.

Monday night the Labor Board announced that unless the paper, a William Randolph Hearst interest, reinstated Jennings within ten days it would be cited to the NRA compliance division and to the Justice Department.

"At the request of the acting general counsel for the National Recovery Administration, the National Labor Relations Board has consented to reopen the San Francisco Call-Bulletin case in order to afford the NRA further opportunity to present the circumstances connected with the adoption of the newspaper code, and of rearguing the questions involved in the decision of the case. A date for such argument and presentation will shortly be announced by the National Labor Relations Board."

Two issues were involved in the Jennings case:

Whether the Labor Relations Board could take jurisdiction.

Whether Jennings' departure from his job was due to his activity as a member of the American Newspaper Guild, an association of editorial workers.

The board, in its decision Monday night ruled "yes" on both questions.

Counsel for the Call-Bulletin had the Newspaper Industrial Board, a group representing both publishers and labor, set up by the newspaper code.

Howard Davis, president of the Newspaper Publishers Association, asserted Monday night the Labor Relations Board's decision, if accepted by the publishers who have signed the code, "nullifies the freedom of the press reservation in the daily newspaper code."

Insurance Stocks Average Higher

New York, Dec. 4.—Insurance stocks in the New York City market continued their gain during the past week. The aggregate value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues, according to Holt, Rose & Troster, amounted to $496,725,000 on November 26, a new high for the year, but closed the week slightly lower at $494,836,000. This figure compares with $490,765,000 on November 23, an increase for the week of $4,071,000, or 0.83 per cent. The new high, reached on November 26, represents an increase of $170,103,000, or over 52 per cent, over the low for the year of $326,622,000 reached on January 2.

The current average yield of the 20 issues of 3.76 per cent compares with a yield of 3.78 per cent a week ago. The current market value is equal to 1.22 times the current liquidating value, against 1.21 times on November 23. Combined operating earnings from underwriting and net investment income are now 9.29 per cent on market, as compared with 9.37 per cent at the close of the previous week, and based upon current figures the 20 issues are now quoted at an average of 10.8 times their combined operating earnings, against 10.7 times on November 23.

to and deny a newspaper story (not carried by the Associated Press) which asserted that important documents wanted by the committee were missing from the files of the du Pont and other companies.

Nye turned to Beebe and after some preliminary verbal skirmishing brought out an account of an effort by the union of gun makers of Liege, Belgium, to modify the Geneva Treaty.

Letters Produced.

He produced correspondence between the union and Stone's and Beebe's companies and copies of letters which Beebe wrote to other American companies.

The substance of the correspondence was that the American manufacturers would be unable to send representatives to the Paris and Geneva sessions but would make every effort to see that American officials and American delegates received a thorough understanding of their point of view.

Secretary Hoover's telegram in calling a meeting of arms makers prior to the Geneva Conference expressed a belief on his part that:

"It is important that the American representative at Geneva be fully posted as to the views of American manufacturers of sporting arms and ammunition so that he may be able to safeguard their interests."

Beebe knew in advance that the meeting was to be held, he said, but denied, as did both DuPont and Stone, having influenced Hoover to call it.

Hoover presided, DuPont continued in describing the session, and each of the arms makers was asked to put his views in writing. He himself read a report saying there was grave objections to the pending draft treaty.

Friends of Ulm Sure Wily Flier Will Be Rescued

Sydney, N. S. W., Dec. 5 (U.P.). Friends of Flight Lieut. Charles T. P. Ulm, reported down near Hawaii on a projected flight from Oakland, Calif., to Australia, were confident today that he will be rescued.

They recalled the flier's ability to pull himself out of dangerous positions and believed he would keep his ship afloat until rescued.

Groups gathered at airports or around news tickers discussed Ulm's many narrow escapes from death and his leading flights.

In 1929, after a successful flight across the Pacific from the United States with Maj. Charles Kingsford-Smith, the famous plane Southern Cross was forced down in the Australian brush and was missing for more than 10 days.

Aboard besides Kingsford-Smith were Ulm, navigator Litchfield and radio operator McWilliam. The men lived on wil dbeans and snails and were all but exhausted when finally found after a search in which native runners, launches and airplanes were used.

20% Gratuity Now Proposed To Aid Housing

Billion of Federal Funds Expected to Enlist 4 More Billions.

(Associated Press.)

A direct Government gift of one-fifth of the cost of building homes for individuals was proposed yesterday in high Administration quarters as a method of opening a $4,000,000,000 tap of private spending.

The plan called for the use of $1,000,000,000 of Federal funds in an effort to bring four times that amount of private capital into construction, totaling $5,000,000,000. The Government expected that through loans insured by the Housing Administration the desire to borrow and to lend would be stimulated.

The program was put forward in the effort to find a middle path between public and private building operations.

No Official Comment.

There was no immediate official comment from either Housing or Relief Administrations. If such a plan were adopted, it would be administered by the Housing Administration, but the officials of all emergency agencies have been endeavoring to devise means of getting more persons to work and off relief rolls.

Some have felt that the present program of insured loans for housing was not enough incentive to building. Borrowers have been slow to respond. One reason ascribed has been that the cost of labor and materials for building made it cheaper to rent than to build. Advocates of the plan said the one-fifth of the cost given by the Government might cause many renters to decide it was advantageous to build.

How Plan Would Work.

An example of the way the proposed plan would work follows:

A man owns a $500 lot. He wants to build a $5,000 home. The Housing Administration investigates. After its approval, the Government advances 20 per cent of the $5,000, or $1,000. The owner borrows the remainder from a bank or other private lending agency, the loan being insured by the Housing Administration.

The Government gift, however, would not be figured into the cost of the house for loan purposes. By adding the value of the lot and $4,000, the borrower would be able to obtain an insured loan of 80 per cent of $4,500, or $3,600. He would be required to put up the remaining $400.

The plan was regarded as a possible alternative to a program with the Government spending several billion dollars in direct construction.

There was a definite feeling among most of the Cabinet members, however, that a certain field of low-cost housing exists in which the Government should enter because theoretically private capital can not provide sufficiently low-priced homes for rental to persons with small wages.

for 18 months. In June she failed to report to the probation officer, and a warrant was issued for her arrest.

It is on that warrant that she is now being held.

"There are a number of other matters which we are considering," Cummings said. "They have to do with relatively recent happenings; for example, the stealing of Government property (the car of Agents Cowley and Hollis) and possibly aiding and abetting a fugitive from justice to escape across a State line and complicity in murder."

Who the other man was with "Baby Face" Nelson the night that Agents Cowley and Hollis were killed is a matter that has never been cleared up so far as the public is concerned. It has been reported that he was either Allen Karpis or the notorious John Hamilton, last of the Dillinger mob.

When asked yesterday whether the man was arrested with Mrs. Gillis, Attorney General Cummings said:

"I can't be quoted on the subject."

Army Planes Speed to Ulm's Rescue at Sea indicating the pilot did not know the direction in which he was flying.

"I don't know if I am South or North of the islands," he said. "I must get the beacon soon."

Then came the message that the plane was lost. It said:

"Have no position; must be badly lost."

The danger in their predicament was emphasized in a wireless a few minutes later:

"Rush this to Army and Navy authorities. Urgent keep radio Beacon going. Have a launch ready, as we have not enough gas."

Planes Begin Search.

It was after two hours' frantic effort to find his way that Lieut. Ulm finally abandoned his attempt and sent out his first SOS.

"We are just going to the water," Ulm radioed. Listening stations said he added the plane would float, but the possibility it might sink spurred Commander Todd to dispatch available planes hastily to begin the far flung search.

"Lieut. Ulm seemed to think he had passed the islands and was southward of here," Commander Todd said, "but he passed over the President Coolidge about 500 miles out at 4 a. m., which would seem to indicate that perhaps he had not yet reached the islands.

"The planes will travel out in a radius of 250 miles in all directions."

Obeying the traditional laws of the sea, the liner President Coolidge, which Lieut. Ulm previously had passed, turned immediately from its course and sped to the fliers' aid.

Messages Stop.

The captain of the ship, approaching Honolulu from San Francisco, estimated that from the time Ulm passed it the ship must be near the place the plane alighted on the ocean.

Messages, wireless operators said, apparently indicated the pilot was successful in bringing his land plane to the waves with safety.

However, the mutual wireless said it had not been able to hear Ulm's signals since he alighted and it was not immediately possible to determine whether the President Coolidge was in contact with him.

Army and Navy authorities intimated a belief that the Star of Australia was down 200 miles northeast of Honolulu.

An Army amphibian plane, returning to the air base at Wheeler Field here at 10:35 a. m., reported it had flown 25 miles to sea, but had failed to sight any trace of the missing plane.

Coast Guard Aids.

The Coast Guard cutter Tiger started from Hilo, Hawaii, 200 miles southeast of Honolulu, and the cutter Itasca already was well on her way when the plane's commander said he was coming down.

The President Coolidge previously had picked up a message at 9:24 a. m., Hawaii time, saying:

"We are turning into wind. Come pick us up."

Mrs. Vanderbilt Ga Right to New Fight

mother could have an opportunity first of all to win back the confidence and affection of the child, and second to show that her future conduct will not be as her past conduct has been."

Justice Carew allowed Mrs. Vanderbilt to spend two days a week with the child; the rest of the time little Gloria stays with her aunt, with the court having the right to decide further on her custody at any time in the future.

This decision Mrs. Vanderbilt contested, saying it did not definitely determine her petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

The appellate division of the supreme court, ruling today on Mrs. Vanderbilt's petition for a writ of mandamus to force Justice Carew either definitely to deny or grant the habeas corpus writ turned down the mother's plea and held the lower court's action was a final determination as far as the present custody of the child is concerned.

Thus, the appellate division ruled, the Carew decision is appealable and nothing stands in the way of carrying the fight to the higher courts.

Quota Act Wins Strong Support From President

Bankhead Bill Has Lifted Prices, His Claim, in Asking Approval.

he regards as a distinct achievement.

Mr. Roosevelt used Department of Agriculture charts, presumably brought here by the Undersecretary of Agriculture, Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell, to illustrate the definite tie-up between the size of the cotton carry-over and the market price.

During the "parity years" of 1909-14, the cotton surplus averaged about 3,250,000 bales. In 1932, the surplus was 13,250,000 bales and the price, as stated, was 5½ cents. Despite this low price, Mr. Roosevelt pointed out, exports were diminishing and foreign cotton production was increasing.

Low Carry-Over Seen Best.

This was interpreted by Mr. Roosevelt as incontrovertible evidence that cheap cotton only results in starvation for the growers and does not mean increased exports and a stop in foreign production. These have been the main arguments advanced against the Administration's price-raising program.

To combat the growing surplus, the President recalled that the plow-under campaign of 1933 cut the carry-over to 11,750,000 bales, and that the Bankhead act had lowered it still lower to 10,500,000 bales this year. It is hoped, he said, to reduce it to 8,750,000 bales by August, continuing the same methods as are now applied.

With patience and a strict adherence to principles, the cotton farmer can look to a "normal" carry-over of 4,000,000 bales in perhaps three years, the President said.

Mr. Roosevelt made it clear that he considers the Bankhead act far and away better than any other method for controlling cotton production. At the same time, he does not think it follows that the same measures might apply to other crops, such as wheat.

Great Loss Seen.

If the act is defeated at the polls ten days from now, he foresees two consequences, both of which would be disastrous to the grower and the Government alike. In the first place, the Southland would revert to its old practice of planting cotton everywhere, even under houses—as he puts it. In the second place, the Government has loans on 9,000,000 bales of cotton and would stand a terrific loss by any great drop in the market.

This was the experience, Mr. Roosevelt recalled wryly, of the old Federal Farm Board of the Hoover regime.

The effect of his plan to lift restrictions from the 600,000 farmers growing only one or two bales will be negligible, amounting to only 200,000 or 300,000 bales, Mr. Roosevelt said. He added that the plan is not to raise cotton to 20 or 25 cents, for example, but to reestablish its parity with other prices.

If this can be done for the South, he said, it will mean more than any other one thing.

Windsor Is Facing Four-City Merger

Windsor, Dec. 4 (AP).—Amalgamation of four border municipalities into a new and bigger Windsor was forecast today in a communication from Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn today.

"Government legislation," he said, "will come down at the next session of parliament, welding Windsor, Walkerville, East Windsor and Sandwich into a city of more than 100,000 population. The new Windsor will come into being on July 1, 1935."

As constituted at present, said the premier, four municipal governments are flourishing extravagantly side by side, "like chain-stores at a busy corner."

Local efforts at amalgamation had come to nothing, and the government had reached a decision that the province must step in.

THEY ALL GET A LIFT WITH A CAMEL!

CIVIL ENGINEER. Says Captain Eric Loch: "Camels have been my cigarette for 9 years. The longer I smoke them the more I appreciate their rich, mild flavor. I smoke all I want and they never jangle my nerves."
NEWSPAPER MAN. Ray Baker of the INS says: "The most enjoyable way of easing strain that I know is smoking Camels. For my experience has been that whenever I feel 'all in' I can quickly restore my energy with a Camel."
EXPLORER. Mrs. Wm. LaVarre reports: "I am devoted to Camels. Any time I'm tired I stop and smoke a Camel. It wakes up my energy in no time. And here's an important point. Smoking Camels steadily, I find, does not affect one's nerves."

Once upon a time, whenever we went to a party we were undecided whether to call them "horsey doovers," "horse de urvies," or, abandoning all pretense, just shouted, "Pass me them little cavvy-air sandwiches!"

But no more. Now, we are accepted as a Final Authority on correct pronunciation, and we can say "Dostoievsky" and "plebiscite" without batting an eye. You see, we've been reading

"Strictly Speaking" in The Washington Post each morning, and it has been putting the words right in our mouth. We have found that "Strictly Speaking" will build up a vocabulary faster than hitting your thumb with a hammer. After you read this instructive column for a few days, you'll be so smart that you can converse with a professor of English without fear of contradiction or corrected pronunciation.

Each morning, five words or phrases in modern usage are defined, and the proper pronunciatoin of each is given. For instance, let's look at "baton." Is it "bat-on" or "bay-ton" or "ba-ton?" And what does it mean, and how can you drag it into the conversation in order to convince Miss Whozis that you are an intelligent lad? Just read "Strictly Speaking" for the answers. You'll find it each morning on the woman's pages of The Washington Post, and after you've read it once and found out how necessary it is to know correct pronunciations of such words as "adult" and "abdomen" and "xylophone" and "zither," you'll read it every day.

There's another bright little spot on the woman's pages we'd like to call to your attention. It's a four-line verse which you'll find in the "Spice-box" every day, and if you haven't been reading it, you're missing the spice of the day. "W. T." writes this little verse and her comments on things in this weary world make it less weary. For example:

"You'll change your mind
Before you think;
So don't betray yourself
In ink."

And we advise you not to change your mind now: turn to the woman's pages and read "Strictly Speaking" and "Spice-box." You'll find them every morning in

State Will Help Several Cities Get Armories

But Commission Thus Far Has Kept Intact Its $30,000 Fund.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—Help to several communities in obtaining armories is under consideration, but the State armory commission so far has kept intact the $30,000 annual appropriation made by the last General Assembly for this purpose, Adjt. Gen. S. Gardner Waller said today.

Gen. Waller, whose annual reports for several years have emphasized the importance of better quarters to avoid loss of some National Guard units, said Winchester, Blacksburg, Berryville and Chase City are among communities considering armory projects.

The appropriation of $30,000 for each year of the biennium carried with it a provisor that communities securing armories with the aid of this fund must match the State money dollar for dollar.

Smaller Towns First.

No limitation was placed on the size of the community to be helped but Gen. Waller said the commission's policy would be to give first consideration to smaller communities which presumably are less able to help themselves. Any armory which is to come up to Federal specifications will cost not less than $30,000 to $35,000 to construct and equip, he said.

The only Virginia cities now having armories are Danville, Lynchburg, Richmond, Roanoke, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Charlottesville, Alexandria, Emporia and Hampton.

Military units elsewhere in the State are using rented quarters, many of which are so inadequate that the very existence of the companies is threatened, Gen. Waller said.

He pointed out that the War Department provides no funds for construction, use or rental of armories but requires the State to do so or else withdraws Federal recognition of the unit and directs its disbandment.

Virginia Warned.

Attention also was called to communications received from the War Department warning Virginia that deficiencies in quarters provided for drilling of National Guard troops and storing of their equipment must be corrected.

A further point made by the adjutant general was that interest of the guardsmen lags and enlistments drop off when they are not provided with adequate headquarters in which to carry on their activities.

The 1934 Assembly's appropriation was regarded as a step toward solution of the problem and the adjutant general expressed confidence that improvements already made in providing for the State's military defense units would be continued.

Fire Alarm Bug Bitten Again

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (AP).—With some people it's stamps. With others it's old coins, butterflys, cigar bands, autographs. With Henry Nuse, 35-year-old Pennsylvanian, it's false alarms.

And since adopting the hobby he already has collected five years in the Baltimore City Jail and the Maryland House of Correction. Today, police said, he was in line to add to his collection.

Nuse walked into a police station here last night, said he was "from Pennsylvania," but had no home, and told police he had set four false alarms since his release from the House of Correction Thanksgiving Day.

His release marked the completion of a six-month sentence for an alarm he sounded last March 29.

His complete four-alarm record since leaving the institution, he said, was one a day, beginning last Friday and ending yesterday.

Questioned by police and firemen, Nuse said he "liked to see the speeding engines and hear their bells." During a recent jail term, he said, it was all he could do to keep himself from pulling the hook of the jail's fire alarm.

Nuse was held for grand jury action on $2,000 bail in police court today. Fire department officials said Nuse has been sounding alarms and being jailed for it more or less regularly since his first offense in 1927.

Mrs. Hawling was the former Miss Missouri Griffith, member of a prominent Loudoun County family.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Hawling, of Bluemont, Va., celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last night with a reception in the Bluemont auditorium. One hundred and fifty guests were present to offer their congratulations to this popular couple, who have passed their entire life in the Bluemont community.

The auditorium was beautifully decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, ferns and myriads of golden candles. A huge pyramid wedding cake, with the numerals 1884-1934 stamped in gold on the icing and encircled by 50 golden tapers was in the center of a large table laden with good things to eat.

Mrs. Hawling wore one of her trousseau gowns, made of changeable brown satin combined with the same shade of moire. It was fashioned after the eighties, with a full skirt reaching to the floor. The full bodice was finished with a square neckline. Her only ornament was a gold brooch, over 100 years old, which belonged to her mother, the late Mrs. J. T. Griffith.

Industry Backs Tilt Against U.S As Competitor

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—A policy of vigorous opposition to Government competition with private business was affirmed today by the council group of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The action was another step toward final ratification of that section of the platform by the Congress of American Industry. The entire industrial platform, announced yesterday, will receive final consideration by the congress Thursday.

Other sections of the platform were considered in closed sessions. The action of the council group was taken in the only open meeting of the day.

Two speakers at the public meeting scored the Government policy of directing business and of establishing "yardsticks" for measurement of private electric utility rates.

For Form of Insurance.

The council group with a unanimous vote adopted the resolution that the "Government should withdraw from all activities competing with those of its citizens. So long as the threat of such competition prevails private industry will hesitate, recovery will be delayed.

A committee considering unemployment insurance or reserves in a closed session, however, brought out a substitute proposal for that topic in the preliminary platform.

It stated that "industry favors a systematic plan of unemployment compensation to involuntarily unemployed persons who are able and willing to work, and is ready to give approval to the adoption of a plan based on sound principles."

Dr. A. P. Haake, of Chicago managing director of the National Association of Furniture Manufacturers, in a speech before the council group drew the line sharply between private management and Government management of business.

"Yardsticks" Scred.

"We have made errors, and we shall make more," he said, "but I would far rather trust the fate of our Nation and our future to what are called the blind forces of competition . . . than I would to the sentimental tinkers who may approach omnipotence but are far from possessing omniscience."

He advocated a campaign of "educating the public" to the true "economic picture."

"We are quarreling with the futility of the methods being employed,' he said, "and we must show that to the people and to Congress."

Paul S. Clapp, of Columbus, Ohio, vice president of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, scored the Government for its announced intention of establishing "yardsticks" in the electric power field which can be measures of electric rates of private companies.

"The flaw in the reasoning is that the Government will measure with a 'rubber yardstick'," he said, the "rubber" part of the plan being that Government will not figure in all of the costs of operation that wolud be met by private utilities.

Watson, of Charleston, chairman of the committee.

Schmitt Views Two Mummies In Tropic Eden

Los Angels, Dc. 4 (AP).—A party of scientists viewed today on uninhabitable Marchena island, off the coast of Ecuador, the mummified bodies of the two men involved in the death mystery of the Equator, and then proceeded to nearby Charles island where they expected to obtain the full story of the mystery.

Capt. G. Allan Hancock, patron of science, sent word by radio that his exploration cruiser Velero III had stopped at the lonely beach of Marchena to see the bodies. Then the party landed on the volcanic sands of Black Beach road, Charles Island.

Dr. Schmitt Heads Party.

Before the scientists, headed by Dr. Waldo L. Schmitt, of the Smithsonian Institution, sailed from Los Angeles November 23, the bodies had been identified by wirelessed descriptions as Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, of Paris, an inhabitant of Charles Island, and Arthur Estampa, Norwegian, also known as Christian Evardsen Stampa, of Academy Bay, Indefatigable Island.

The real mystery of the situation is what happened to Baroness Eloise Bonsquet de Wagner, formerly of Vienna and Paris, who brought Lorenz to the old convict Isle of Charles three years ago with Robert Philipson.

The answer to this mystery is what the scientists set out to find. They went ashore in a small boat to the foot of the narrow black road built by convicts a century ago from a trail used in the century before by pirates who hunted the archipelago.

"Garden of Eden."

Several miles up this road is the little Garden of Eden establishment started in 1928 by Dr. Friederich Ritter, of Berlin, and his mate, Frau Dore Strauch Koerwier.

From them, Capt. Hancock and his scientific party expected to learn the real story of the mysterious tragedy. Dr. Ritter wrote last July to Capt. Hancock, who visits him each year with a scientific party, that the baroness and Philipson had left the island, and there was something about the affair that he dared not write.

It was expected Dr. Ritter would unfold what he knew of this story, in one of the most lonely inhabited spots in the world, beneath the cone of an ancient volcano, on the convict island more than 500 miles off the coast of Ecuador.

Oyster Output Up in Maryland

124,497 More Bushels Taken Last Month Than Same Period in 1933.

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (AP).—Maryland's oyster production during November exceeded the figure for November, 1933, by 124,497 bushels.

State Conservation Commissioner Swepson Earle, who gave out the figures today, said he was "highly pleased" at the increase of production, and anticipated the season's output would reach the 2,000,000-bushel mark provided weather conditions continued favorable.

For the three-month period beginning in September of this year and ending November 30, Earle's figures showed oystermen in the State produced 825,381 bushels. For the same period last year, the total number of bushels produced was 644,005, Earle said.

The amount derived from the oyster inspection tax for the same months was $16,507.60 in 1934, compared with $11,680.09 for 1933.

Kiwanis Club Tree Hunting

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 4. Members of a committee representing Martinsburg Kiwanis Club are combing the woodlands here for a community Christmas tree for the public square.

It was feared last year that a tree for the 1934 Christmas might not be available, since evergreen trees large enough for this purpose are becoming scarce in this area, but committeemen are confident that one will be located. It was the plan to have the tree ready for lighting about the same time as are the "fairy-land" street decorations, about December 10.

The club voted to discontinue one of its annual events—that of the annual underprivileged children's party on Chrisimas morning.

Smith, of the Eighth Virginia District, notified Raymond Jackson, chairman of the Albemarle County Democratic committee, yesterday.

Dr. Sidney Lentz, superintendent of the University Hospital, said that the loan grant would be used to construct a new private-room pavilion or wing, which also will contain offices and a nursery for infants. There will be about 40 private rooms, with baths, in the wing.

The application for the loan was placed with the Public Works Administration in December of last year and has been under consideration since that time.

Ducks Are Plentiful Along Wicomico River

Leonardtown, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.). Duck hunters on the Wicomico River report the ducks plentiful and bag limits easy to obtain. Foxes also are numerous in that section and the foxhunters expect fine sport as soon as it gets colder and the last of the fields cleared of the harvest.

Owing to the many wooden or snake fences still used in Upper St. Marys and Charles counties, it is easy for horses and dogs to jump. Most of the hunting is done in that section, but all parts of St. Marys county afford plenty of that sport as long as the season lasts.

Court Upholds Bank Figures

Itemized Statements Filed by Receiver at Frederick Are Approved.

Frederick, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.). Two volumes of itemized statements showing the progress of the receivership of the defunct Central Trust Company from June 30 to November 17 filed in the circuit court by John G. Ghingher, receiver and State bank commissioner, were approved by an order signed by Chief Judge Hammond Urner and Judge Arthur D. Willard.

The order also authorized a reduction in the bond of the receiver from $250,000 to $50,000 and sanctioned the payment of an additional $60,000 by the receiver to the People's Liquidating Corporation under the plan of reorganizing the bank.

The court's action was taken on a petition filed by Mr. Ghingher, through his attorney, former Judge John S. Newman. After referring to itemized statements of receipts and disbursements from June 30, to November 17, the report shows a balance of $88,737.79 in the hands of the receiver.

Mr. Ghingher suggested in his petition that he be authorized to pay to the liquidating corporation the additional $60,000, having already paid over sums of $10,000 and $75,000. He also suggested that the amount of his bond be materially reduced from $250,000 in view of present conditions and to effect a savings in the amount of the premium. The petition of Mr. Ghingher contained a long list of receipts and disbursements.

Part Of The New Deal.

Those who feel that compulsory military training in State institutions is un-American will be disappointed in the Supreme Court decision upholding the expulsion of two University of California students for refusing to drill. Those who have noticed the growth of the theory that individual liberties should be rigorously subordinated to public welfare will not be at all surprised that the decision was unanimous.

The two California students maintained that compulsory drill was a violation of the fourteenth amendment, the due process clause of that amendment, and the Briand-Kellogg peace pact. The Court pithily showed that such arguments merit "little consideration," maintaining also that no student is forced to attend California University. This latter belief smacks somewhat of sophistry, for it would seem to deprive those students who can afford no other education than that offered by a State college of their chance for cultural advancement, if the military rules of the institution are contrary to their own religious or ethical views.

Those citizens who, as the Court phrased it, condemn compulsory drill "as unwise or illiberal or unfair when there is violence to conscientious scruples" can turn to Congress and State legislatures to support their view. But it is idle to argue that any exception on the score of military education should be made as long as the tide sets strongly toward subordination of the individual to the State.

Twenty Per Cent Delinquent.

Home owners who have obtained loans from the Government to save their property have been warned by the HOLC that they must meet their obligations or face foreclosure. In some cases, where home owners have deliberately tried to take advantage of paternalism, foreclosure proceedings have been instituted.

Chairman Fahey of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation points out that "more than 70 per cent of the corporation's borrowers are meeting their obligations on the dates when they are payable." That may appear to be a satisfactory record when compared with past performance, but it certainly leaves much to be desired from the viewpoint of efficiency. Nearly 20 per cent of the home owners aided by the Government are already in the delinquent class and about 10 per cent are making payments belatedly.

In view of the recent improvements in HOLC collections, the percentage of delinquencies may be less important than the reasons which have induced some home owners to withhold payments due. In several known instances, says Mr. Fahey, "the home owner, after obtaining a loan from the corporation, has not made a single monthly payment of interest or principal due, although demonstrably in a position to make all payments required." In other words, these beneficiaries have taken the attitude that since their mortgages are now held by the Government, payments can be forgotten.

The HOLC deserves commendation for its businesslike movement toward foreclosure against such borrowers. In the public interest sound business principles must be applied by those governmental agencies that have temporarily taken over the functions of private enterprise. Possibly the greatest danger lies in the pressure which groups of home owners thus aided by the Government may bring to bear upon Congress for more lenient treatment. It is possible to visualize the existence, a few years hence, of a home owners' lobby that will rival in activity and influence the veterans' lobby of today.

The experience of the HOLC should be of special interest to all who are now using the phrase "self-liquidating" in a manner as casual as that of the HOLC defaulters.

Above Technicalities.

Justice Luhring's decision that Sam Beard and 13 others must stand trial helps to clear the way for vigorous prosecution of Washington's alleged gambling racketeers. So long as this indictment was in question the campaign against gambling was under a handicap. The courts have refused to nullify Beard's indictment on a technicality. Relentless prosecution in this case will afford an appropriate background for the efforts of civic, professional and business groups to wipe out the gambling dens that are known to be a source of major crimes.

Beard's attorneys claimed his indictment was illegal because a member of the grand jury had received a loan from the HOLC. If all individuals who have obtained benefits from the Government under the present regime should be disqualified for duty on grand juries, the administration of justice might be often frustrated. Both as a precedent discouraging evasion of trial through technicalities and as an aid to the local fight against crime, Justice Luhring's decision may be considered a significant event.

Germany And The League.

Simultaneously with the signing of the constructive Franco-German agreement over the Saar, the Reich's Foreign Minister has made a very conciliatory statement regarding Germany's return to membership in the League of Nations. Initiative for this development, Baron von Neurath is represented as saying, must come from Geneva rather than Berlin. Under diplomatic etiquette this is virtually equivalent to a request that the League ask Berlin to reconsider its notice of withdrawal, sent on October 21, 1933.

There are a number of reasons for anticipating that the Council of the League may before long act favorably upon this and similar German overtures. In the first place, there is good precedent in the case. Spain sent the League notice of withdrawal from membership in 1926. Such notices do not becomes effective for two years and before expiration of the statutory period the Council formally urged Madrid to reconsider its action, which was done. Technically, therefore, Spain never ceased to be a member of the League of Nations and the same will be true in the case of Germany if the resignation is rescinded prior to next October. Incidentally, Japan's two-year notice does not take effect until March 27, 1935, though in this case there is less reason to expect moves for reentry.

It is no mere coincidence that the placatory gesture of the German Foreign Minister should coincide with the Saar development. The Franco-German accord on this subject, signed at Rome on Monday, represents more than a very promising formula for peaceful settlement of one of Europe's most dangerous issues. It also represents a notable triumph for the conciliatory machinery of the League. The Berlin government has worked cooperatively with the Saar plebiscite committee in reaching this accord. Extension of this cooperation to include full League membership would be a natural further step.

The isolation implicit in resignation from League membership is a real force. It operates much more strongly against a country which has abandoned membership than against one which has never assumed the obligations of the Covenant, for in the former case a developing hostility to collective action in behalf of peace is implied. Both Japan and Germany are today feeling the effects of this isolation. Their common case has even aroused speculation as to the possibility of a working agreement between the two in the field of foreign policy. Such speculation would be terminated if Germany should again assume her seat at Geneva.

Germany's notice of withdrawal from League membership was a striking gesture. But it has gained the Nazi government rather less than nothing in practical results and there is little doubt that Berlin will reverse its steps in this matter if the road back is made easier by Geneva. To do this, the Saar agreement indicates, will now be a major purpose of French as well as of Italian and British diplomacy.

The League, however, would be ill-advised to readmit Germany on her own terms, as Baron von Neurath evidently wishes. The advantages of membership at Geneva are coupled with certain general obligations, of which the promotion of international cooperation is placed first in the preamble to the Covenant. Germany can best promote international cooperation by ceasing persecution of "non-Aryan" elements in her population. She is willing to agree to such an understanding, at least temporarily, so far as the Saar is concerned. This commitment should be made universal in German territory before Berlin's overtures to Geneva receive any formal response.

Strength Or Violence?

The trial of the former Soviet functionary Nicolieff for the assassination of Sergei Kiroff, member of the Communist Party's Political Bureau, will be a major test of the Russian Government's political stability. The investigation of the plot involved—and this investigation's effects upon the recent ameliorations of the laws to combat counter-revolutionary activities—will be closely watched for indications of whether the present regime really feels itself at last securely ensconced.

Until recently the Soviets were meeting internal unrest with a ruthlessness which evidenced fear for their own permanence. Then they gave incontestable proof of confidence. It was announced that the horrors of the Ogpu would end; the death penalty was abolished. Now comes the killing of Kiroff. Moscow dispatches imply that, as a consequence, there has been a reestablishment of capital punishment, together with the previous provisions for summary arrests, instant trial, denial of appeal, and immediate execution of sentence.

Few, except revolutionaries, would condemn a government for protecting its existence, and the Communist Government of Russia can scarcely be expected to forgo its own preservation. But return to the old methods would severely shake confidence in the permanence of the present regime. Violence is not indicative of strength. Moscow would be well advised not to meet terrorism with terrorism.

Is There A Program?

As a chief advocate of public spending to prime the pump of private enterprise, Secretary Ickes has added a capstone to the arguments presented to President Roosevelt in favor of that policy. "We've got to have a new public works program," he is quoted as saying, "until we do the trick—until private enterprise comes in to take up the slack."

This reference to a program seems to imply that Secretary Ickes has some definite plan in mind. It carries at least a suggestion that he has laid before the President a comprehensive outline of useful public works sufficiently extensive to give jobs to a great majority of the unemployed. But the Secretary has not yet divulged to the public the practical details of his proposed gigantic undertaking.

Mr. Ickes has specifically mentioned slum clearance and the elimination of railroad grade crossings as a part of his "program." Moreover, his plan has been stretched to include "all kinds of civic improvements," which is reminiscent of the advance publicity from the CWA. All such enterprises, however, will require careful and detailed planning to avoid a wasteful and relatively futile expenditure of public funds. There is as yet no indication that the "program" Secretary Ickes has in mind is any better planned than was the CWA.

No upper limit on expenditures for "pump priming" has been publicly suggested, but the Administrator of Public Works speaks deprecatingly of the $3,600,000,000 appropriated for that purpose during the last two years. "You couldn't expect sums like that," he said, "to do the job we had planned for." Apparently he contemplates the outpouring of many billions of dollars to create jobs as soon as possible. It would be comforting if there could be cited one historical instance in which the method proposed has brought the result anticipated.

If difficulty has been encountered in finding enterprises on which enormous sums may be both profitably and hastily spent, it will not be surprising. There is grave doubt as to whether any manageable program involving expenditures large enough to revive the heavy goods industries can be devised within a few months. When this factor is added to the question of whether private enterprise would gain any lasting momentum from such a venture, the extent of the gamble which Secretary Ickes is urging upon the President becomes apparent.

Prodigies.

New York is having an epidemic of child prodigies. First one was discovered in a Manhattan school with the surprising IQ of 196, which is very close to that boasted by Herr Doktor Einstein. But the very next day Brooklyn came forth with a 7½-year-old boy whose IQ is 230 by the Leland Stanford revision of the Binet Simon tests. And that is the highest ever recorded. We tremble to think what paragon of precocity will be announced when this news infiltrates the reaches of the Bronx.

Neither of these youngsters, who bandy figures in a manner to astound their elders, will be exhibited in your local theater. The names of both are kept a secret and they are growing up quite unaware of the furor they have caused. But from all accounts they are remarkable children whose mental attainments are little short of marvelous.

Einstein has an IQ 25 points below that of the Brooklyn wonder who, at his tender age, has devised a "mathematical alphabet," with which he writes with ease, and who has invented a "numerical system of musical notation" that has astounded those who have examined it. Evidently he has a mathematical-musical mind, much like the inferior Einstein. At least it is reported that upon return from a trip to Washington he was able to describe in detail this city's street system and abstruse method of street numbering. And that is something quite beyond the ability of even the better brain trusters!

It is to be hoped, now the world knows of these two prodigies, that it will have sense enough to let them alone. Nothing will be gained by exposing them to the public view and since neither seems gifted as a violin player their exploitation would add nothing to the gayety of nations. Perhaps, if they are brought up right, they will be of some real value to the world some day. After all, Einstein is getting old and the Washington street system shows no sign of being modified for a long time to come.

Correction.

By an unfortunate error former Senator Irvine Lenroot was referred to as "the late Senator Irvine Lenroot" in an editorial on this page yesterday. We hope that ex-Senator Lenroot, who is a Judge of the U. S. Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, will pardon the mistake, for which we express our very sincere regrets.

Timeless Verse.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a poet, may I convey to you my deep appreciation of The Post in publishing weekly a poetry column? This is a revelation to the poets of today—each time a periodical, newspaper or magazine steps forward in public recognition of the effectiveness of this fine art for everyday life. It would seem that, during the mad rush of our machine age, a proper appreciation of poetry, like many priceless things, has been cast aside, shall we say, for the more practicable and speedy things of today.

Poetry has survived all ages, and it will survive this one, in spite of the fact that many contend the machine age has stifled our emotions. Is not material progress conducive to greater opportunities—the results of new discoveries and inventions unknown in the days of yesteryears—creating a broader range for the human mind? And does not poetry keep abreast of all times, more often ahead, being flexible, comprehensive and far-reaching in its essence? It has always been the medium of our supreme expression, and being so much a part of us it will live on, for it is the result of intense emotions, and as long as we are human we will and must have our emotions. Are there not among us today poets comparable to any age? Poetry knows no time nor space. It is the record of our greatest moments; the interpretation of the divine in each of us, making real the mystery of human existence. And no matter the time nor the age, it meets each in sublime indifference to adversity of thought or action; forever holding us in its charm as long as there is love, life and hope, whether its melodies are full of happiness, deep in sorrow or enriched with the spice of life; always bringing out the philosophy of our souls—hence the immortality of poetry!

Mexican Bibliographies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Experience has taught me that one gains little by writing protests to editors. However, my reluctance is overcome every now and then when certain odd, bizarre, or peculiar ideas are brought to my attention. A recent one of these is an article in The Post of December 2, called "Mexicans Don't Read" and signed "G. S. T."

I should call the piece interesting—if true. Without taking the writer to task (incidentally, I think it is a woman) on the contents of the article, I should like to make a few observations on the question of Mexican bibliographies. A few hints of this type may vastly improve the writer's chances of "trying to understand Mexican psychology."

A considerable number of books printed in Mexico will be found listed in Jose T. Medina's "La Imprenta en Mexico;" in Dr. Priestley's bibliography in "The Mexican Nation;" in the first volume of H. H. Bancroft's "History of Mexico;" in the Hispanic-American bibliographies of Jones and Wilgus; in the catalogue files of the Bancroft Library at Berkeley, the Garcia Library at Austin, the Library of Congress, the Lima Library at the Catholic University, and at Duke University. Why add such detailed studies as those now being published by the Mexican government, each volume being bibliographies devoted to individual states?

If "one looks in vain for books that reveal the picturesque life or creative thought in Mexico during that (colonial) era," I think one should be ashamed of oneself for not having looked in the right places. How could one avoid the letters of Cortes, of Zumarraga, or the reports of the viceroys? How could one fail to discover the histories of Motolinia, Sahagun, Torquemada, Mota Padilla, Clavijero, Bustamante, Alaman, Bulnes, Icazbalceta, and many others not so distinguished? Surely these contain more than sermons or "lives of saints," if one will but peek into them.

Creative thought had its devotees, too, I believe. Two figures should be known even to "one who has looked in vain" for such as they. I refer to Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz and to Siguenza y Gongora. A recent biography of the former is obtainable in any Mexican bookstore and Dr. Irving Leonard, of the University of California, has produced an admirable study of Siguenza which is easily obtainable by those interested.

There is no use in rowing over such little matters as G. S. T. wrote on today, but it is well to remember that Spain has not been in Mexico since about 1821.

PAUL V. MURRAY.
Washington, Dec. 2.

The Bonus.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a constant reader of The Post for a number of years, and as such, I have always been an ardent supporter of your excellent paper and your stand for what is generally the best for the Nation as a whole.

Your attitude on matters pertaining to the betterment of the Nation and the people has been courageous and outstanding. Especially is this true with reference to vital matters pertaining to recovery from the depression, one phase of which is the muchly discussed bonus question and its final adjustment.

Prior to the stand that the Government has taken in the seemingly rash appropriation of money to all classes of peoples and organizations, I have always been most hesitant in advocating or desiring that the bonus should be paid in cash to veterans who were badly in need of financial aid. However, since it has been the consent and desire of all Government agencies to appropriate funds for practically every class or organization or group of people, I can hardly fathom the reason why the veterans should not receive favorable consideration. I have yet to see, without exception, a single dissenting voice to raising finances by our Government to payment of any claims except those of the veterans. Plenty of money seems to be always available for such matters. But mention the payment of the bonus, and dissenting voices, both from a personal and press standpoint, are much in evidence. HORRY E. SMITH.
Front Royal, Va., Dec. 3.

Unpoetic Autos.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Can not something be done to prohibit the parking of cars in front of the beautiful Folger Library every Sunday? Many pictorial photographers and some professionals see their only chance to make a good picture spoiled by this anachronism. Right by the statue of "Puck," too, with the fitting quotation, "What Fools These Mortals Be," in the private driveway.

Being one of the few remaining Americans who not only have read Shakespeare, but have seen Henry Irving, Ellen Terry, Mansfield and others in some of his plays, it really causes high blood pressure.

BAYART REID.
Washington, Dec. 3.

"Not Charity."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many of our honorably discharged soldiers are able and willing to work. They are native-born white men whose tattered uniforms and medals bear proof of their loyalty to America and our flag; men who, when our country was in a death struggle, faced death many times.

The so-called New Deal has ignored them. Not one of these men has ever taken part in any demonstration or marched to make demands on their Government. They are not radicals. I am one of these men with no employment and few clothes. For Thanksgiving I had a five-cent box of sardines and a loaf of bread. Today, at 3 p. m., I have had no food at all.

Can it be possible in America that honest, educated men who have fought for America shall starve and be forced to commit crime to live? I detest charity and so-called "relief." I am ashamed of my Government as it is conducted today with camouflage, lies, false promises and graft.

I would be more than pleased to debate my cause with any one of the so-called experts of the New Deal. PAUL THOMAS.
Washington, Nov. 30.

Difference in Power.

The English dailies, especially the more conservative papers, are still tremendously interested and impressed by the overwhelming majorities for the New Deal in the Congressional elections. They seem to view it as something of an epoch, a changing era, a "movement."

Only lately the London News-Chronicle concluded that Mr. Roosevelt is now "the most powerful man in the world." Such power the News-Chronicle believes will bear watching with a view to its effect on the rest of the world.

We may be making history under Roosevelt. Perhaps we are, but it will not be violent history or any such a complete transformation in government as that effected when the Czar fell or when the reign of terrorists took the heads of Louis and Antoinette.

Possibly Mr. Roosevelt is the most powerful man in the world in the sense that he is the undisputed leader of the most powerful country in the world. His power is not relatively as absolute as Mussolini's or Hitler's or that of Mustapha Kemal Pasha. Stalin is more absolute.

Here, however, is the difference: Roosevelt has usurped no power, and in the recent elections there was no intimidation of the voters. There may have been some cajoling at the public pie counter, so to speak, but that, after all, is a good old Yankee custom established by the Republicans.

No, only as his personal leadership and popularity are great is the President's power effective. Congress can tie the President's hands any day it likes if it senses the people would support it.

The Italian and German and Russian equivalents of our Congress can not tie the hands of Mussolini, Hitler or Stalin. This is a democracy—not a dictocracy.

The Post Impressionist

"If That Be Treason—"

Post Office, Wednesday.

A FAIR friend of a friend of ours used to boast:

"I've the best blood of America in my veins. I'm connected collaterally with both Benedict Arnold and Aaron Burr."

Well that's one manner of getting away with such an inheritance.

We thought of this girl when we read how Gen. Smedley D. Butler had resisted the offer of an American dictatorship. Gen. B.'s descendants won't have to bluff. They can proudly quote their ancestor:

"I refused it. It smacked of treason!"

And, having thought thus far, we fell to pondering the question: "Just what constitutes treason in America, anyhow?"

We knew—even we—a bit about the two most famous treason trials in our country's history: Burr's and John Brown's. Brown, whatever else may be said of him, did organize and actively carry out an armed attack upon a Government arsenal—and was hanged for it. Burr was tried both for treason and for "launching an armed expedition against a state at peace with the United States"—but, for lack of conclusive evidence he was acquitted.

We had knowledge, too, of the Whisky Rebellion in Pennsylvania—the one in the 1790's, not the one in which we ourselves bore small arms during the prohibition era. We were aware that attempts to try its leaders for treason had failed. Nor were we entirely ignorant of efforts made to lodge treason charges, in the 50's against members of the board of directors of the Underground Railroad—for aiding the escape of slaves.

Nevertheless, we weren't at all sure as to what, precisely, treason is in this America of ours. So many people seemed to get away with such a lot that would get them a gallows elsewhere.

Then somebody suggested that we might read the Constitution—and, Mr. James M. Beck not being near by to give us the information at comfortable second-hand, we did look it up near its source:

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted."

This strikes us as pretty broad. It strikes us as almost too liberal. And it explains a lot.

Probably the delicate position which our Constitution-makers themselves had lately held, in the matter of so-called treason to the British Crown, widened their sympathies. Certainly, they were well aware that, "on many occasions, English courts had construed as treason crimes far from treasonable." So they considerably eased the fourteenth century statute of Edward III, which they had started with as a basis for their definition.

Treason is the only crime that the Constitution defines at all, and, though its penalty is, at the courts' discretion, death, or imprisonment for a minimum of five years—besides a fine of not less than $10,000: presumably 100-cent dollars—those courts have even refined the original refinement. We have it on the authority of Bertram Benedict—no relative to girl quoted at the start of the present column:

To be sure, "the mere assembling of the expedition, even though it commit no overt act, is treason." To be sure, too, "so is participation of any kind, however indirect or remote, in the steps leading to the assembling." And "misprison of treason consists in concealing from the authorities knowledge of commission of treason"—to the tune of imprisonment up to seven years and a fine up to $1,000." But there again "the treason must have been committed, not merely planned."

Thus, anyhow, Dr. Benedict,

If those Constitution-manufacturers were really uneasy about their past, the things that Dr. B. says concerning the courts' amelioration of the Constitution's definition raise some queer questions as to what troubled the conscience of the courts. . . .

* * *

He says: "An attempt to hinder the execution of a Federal law by concerted force might be construed as treason. But such an attempt would have to be of a public nature and deliberate."

We inquire: What is meant by "force?" By "a public nature?" And by "deliberate?"

We have heard deeds threatened—yes, and seen deeds done—"to hinder the execution of a Federal law" in the last few years, which——

However, no doubt that anonymous German was right whom Longfellow paraphrased:

"Treason can ne'er succeed. And what's the reason?
Because, if it succeeds, it isn't treason."

London.

JAPAN seized Manchuria in September, 1931. The League of Nations said she musn't do it; the United States flapped her wings on the side of the league; the Lytton Commission reported that Japan would be exhausted by her vain efforts to inflate a punctured Manchuria. But after three years Japan shows little sign of being out of breath, and is even looking around for more balloons to blow up.

There is little doubt that Japan wants to be overlord of the Orient. Independent Manchoukuo is the most transparent of devices designed to make it difficult for the rest of the world to protect. Japan already has practical control of the northern provinces of China proper; she has announced her "Monroe Doctrine" for the Orient; she intends to avoid the limitations of the Washington naval treaty by one means or another; and she is forcing foreign oil interests to build up reserves and refineries in Japan so that her navy may be as independent as possible of foreign supplies. We have only Japan's assurance that the Carolines are not being fortified.

China is divided by internal rivalries and if no one interferes from the outside it will be possible for Japan to annex province after province, always on the pretext of establishing order. External opposition can only come from Russia, England or the United States. The Dutch are interested, but they can not stand alone against Japan.

Russia's part is a passive one. Even if she should develop a will for war, her halting economic mechanism would prevent any immediate action. She offers training to Chinese Communists and naturally is not enthusiastic about Japanese conquest of the East. But the active part in bringing about a Russo-Japanese war would have to be taken by Japan.

• • • •

THE most important question, therefore, is what England intends to do and to an outside observer it must look as though she were earning her traditional mantle of perfidy. She joined in the unanimous condemnation of Japan at Geneva, then imposed an arms embargo against both Japan and China, sold the day to Japan and canceled the effect of the censure. While other countries questioned Japan with regard to the independence of Manchoukuo and the open door of trade, she confined herself to the door and asked no awkward questions about independence.

Obviously, there are in England, so-called "practical men" who "face the facts" and have no sympathy with votes of censure on Japan. They are out for business. If they don't get into Manchukuo now it will be too late, for the German and French have already had first cut at the roast. So, off goes the mission of the Federation of British Industries, fishing for business and for an understanding with Japanese industrialists which will lessen the force of Japanese competition.

While they are at it they appoint themselves unofficial evangelists and proclaim that all thinking people in England are friendly to Japan. This is an opinion which might be received sympathetically in navy circles, and even by the Conservative government, but as a statement of English opinion it is grotesquely untrue. There is great opposition in England, not to Japan as such, but to imperialistic conquest as a method of modernizing undeveloped countries.

For if the matter is merely one of national rivalries, in heaven's name why shouldn't Japan expand into China? Japan's method is the old one of England in India, Germany in Africa, Holland in the East Indies. Is Japan to be excluded merely because the other countries say she's too late? Are we to oppose her because we fear she'll tread on our corns? Have we eyes on China ourselves so that we resent Japan's quicker move?

If these are our motives for opposition to Japan we are on very uncertain ground. It would be more honest to adopt the attitude of the F. B. I. and smile on a pupil who has shown her merit. For Japanese industry is well organized, its product is cheap and adequate for its purpose.

• • • •

SURELY the only case against Japan worth putting is that she has done more than any other country to break down the post-war peace mechanisms which she had promised to support. To this the Japanese might well reply that their sections are no more destructive of peace than the victors' treatment of Germany during the past 15 years. Japan has established order; Europe, by imposing impossible economic demands on Germany, has produced chaos. Japan is extending the area under one economic control, Europe is contracting it. Grant the truth of these counter-charges, there are still millions of people in Europe who condemn nationalism and autarchy, and believe that the world can not progress from enmity to peace until some way is found to develop economic internationalism and division of function. They oppose Japan because her methods are a denial of permanent peace.

Japan has been able to ignore opposition mainly because of dissention in Europe, and for this England must take a large part of of the blame. My country has played too long at adjusting the difference of others without accepting responsibilities herself. She has tried to avoid European entanglements and has added to the general confusion.

It is imperative for the peace of the world that England should realize that her interests are those of America and not those of Japan. Her attitude to the United States should not be determined by petty naval or industrial jealousy, superficial antagonism, false feelings of superiority or misunderstandings due to the accident of a common language. England must scrap the methods of the present government, make a clear stand against imperialism and false nationalism. In such action she would have the full support of the United States and would be securing peace in the Pacific and in Europe. If she finds the problem too great for her and shirks the issue, she condemns herself to the position of a secondary European power, the new Scandinavian country.

What part will the United States play? She is opposed to warfare and imperialism more than any other country, but her support of international measures to develop peace is still passive. Internally she has a long tradition of social evasion, for, as long as it was possible to go west, social adjustments could be dodged. In external affairs she has a very proper distrust of European politics and is inclined to settle awkward questions by washing her hands of them.

But the day of facing internal responsibilities has arrived, and maybe she will soon acept her external obligations. The difficulties of the Pacific are not to be settled by mere withdrawal from the Philippines. America's policy must be positive.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Another Russian Lullaby

FOR sheer mystery interest, the assassination in Russia of Sergei M. Kiroff, one of Stalin's chief lieutenants, surpasses that South Sea Island tale of a few days ago. But there is this difference: The world will probably learn the truth of the South Sea Island riddle. It will be a long time, if ever, before we know the real story of M. Kiroff's death. He was a member of that closed corporation which has some 180,000,000 people in its grip. There is hardly a chance in the world for the correspondents to get at the truth and then, if they did, they could get it out only at the peril of their stay in Russia.

BARGERON.

Everything that comes out through the regular channels has to be approved by the foreign office. This means that every version we read of the assassination is, for one reason or another, unobjectionable to the Russian government. Although the correspondents over there will put their stories in more readable form they will be no more than government communiques.

• • • •

This situation, of course, makes the incident one of the world's best mystery yarns. Ah, maybe, it was a story of love and hate, of intrigue. Maybe it was a story of unrequited love, of jealousy. Maybe a famous dancer of the ballet is back of it all.

It is not suggested that it was any of these things. The point is that there is no way for us to find out. Within that closed corporation many things go on. Tempers reach the boiling point. But they keep their hates, their loves, their prejudices, their ambitions, all the emotions that are peculiar to men, within their circle. What goes on among them is their secret.

When this writer was over there the correspondents were trying their best to confirm a report that Stalin was married to a sister of one of his lieutenants. They didn't have a chance in the world and they could not have done anything with the story had they got it except slip it out surreptitiously, which would very likely have ended their career in Russia.

It's a great country, it is.

An indication of what it is may be gained from the correspondents' dispatches to the effect that everyone arrested in connection with the case will be convicted. Those statements are passed by the Foreign Office too. And it is apparent from this, and the fact that so many are being arrested, that regardless of who or what was responsible for Kiroff's death, there is a challenging unrest in Russia. There has long been unrest among the farmers. The way in which the Soviets are dragging men in in connection with Kiroff's death would seem to indicate that the unrest is becoming organized.

One correspondent who served several years in Russia, but who is now stationed here, thinks this is the case. Some time ago the government purported to relax its rigid political vigil. In the opinion of the correspondent it was with a view of impressing the outside world. He thinks the Russians themselves began to take the purported let-up seriously, that they really thought they were to have more political freedom. It's a good joke on them, if they did, as they will now find out.

• • • •

It's all another example of why we should advance our bureaucracy to a greater and more efficient point, to more of a closed corporation. Things can be done much more quickly and with a much greater felicity than in a slow-moving democracy. In fact, it's great stuff—for the fellows who are on top.

No End of Books

Genevieve Wimsatt Brings Us Chinese Folk Ballad; Sigmund Spaeth Chuckles Over Song-Writers.

By Theodore Hall.

ANY good encyclopedia will tell you that Ch'in Shin Huang Ti—China's first emperor and the man who united the seven warring nations of the Middle Kingdom—built the Great Wall in the third century, B. C. History knows he did it by conscript labor, and because he hated scholars (they had been praising the good old ways and impeding his innovations)—the emperor saw to it that the labor gangs were plentifully supplied with men from the scholarly class. And resupplied, because that immense project cost almost a life for every foot. The Great Wall is full of human bones.

But one little story comes down the centuries with scant help from the historians and literati of China. The scholar, Fan Ch'i Liang, had been snatched off to the wall by the emperor's men only three days after he had married the beautiful Meng Chiang. She grieved until her waist was "like the willow wand," and then set out after him. After a long journey she reached the wall, to find her husband had just died. Friendly workmen pointed out the spot in the wall where Ch'i Liang was buried. When Meng Chiang wept before it, the wall crumbled. She took up her husband's bones and leaped into the Eastern Sea.

Now that, of course, is fable—but fable which brings to life the individual human hearts smothered under the great generalities of history. And we find it in a "Ku Shih" or drum song—a Chinese folk ballad, handed down by word of mouth and sung to drums or flutes—which is the first to appear in English.

Miss Genevieve Wimsatt (whose Chinese house on Twenty-eighth street in Georgetown must have caught your eye) and Geoffrey Chen have translated the "Meng Chiang Nu," which appears in a marvelously handsome volume—"The Lady of the Long Wall" (Columbia U. Press, $3.75). In varied, free-shifting cantos, the old story comes to us with the misty beauty of a Chinese painting.

But though the terms and the images are alien to us, we catch the true folk quality. Here is a ballad as old as a sequoia tree, and the lady wails for her husband——

". . . Who knows that he Is vanished like a stone tossed in the sea?"

Empires came and went, and men named every corpuscle inside their bodies and nearly every atom without—and a lady in St. Louis sent up her cerulean wailing for a man whose heart was as far from her as "a rock cast in the sea."

• • • •

Let us turn back to China before going on with song. Kenneth Scott Latourette, professor of Oriental history at Yale, issued last January his two-volume work, "The Chinese: Their History and Culture." Already it has been recognized as the clearest and most compact study we have on a vastly long and complex matter—everything from dynasties to the way a Chinese servant, suspected of purloining sugar, will "save his face."

Now it appears in a second edition, slightly revised, and bound in one volume (Macmillan, $5). It belongs on the shelf of everyone who would understand the long background of "a spectacle the like of which in sheer magnitude human beings have never before seen. The largest fairly homogeneous group of mankind is experiencing the most thoroughgoing and destructive revolution in its history. The outcome remains uncertain."

• • • •

Sigmund Spaeth has made one field his own—the cause and cure of the American popular song. No one can point out so swiftly that the curly-headed crooner is really singing a phrase from a Mendelssohn symphony. No one, not even the late Ring Lardner, has made more hay among the free-lance rhymes and grammar, the literary elegencies, and the sick-making sentimentalities of the song writers.

Hot from "The Tune Detective's" griddle comes "The Facts of Life in Popular Song" (Whittlesey House, $1.50). In the title chapter, Mr. Spaeth has a grand time spoofing the lyrics of a number of songs, heard on every hand, which would never get through the customs. He goes on to grammar, chuckling at many a favorite which will concede nothing to Baron Ireland's ungrammatical song to end all ungrammatical songs: "If I Had of Knew What I'd Ought to Have Knew, I'd Never of Did What I Done." Rhyme gives him 100 chances for the old shillalah—choicest of which is this ingenious couplet from "Making Whoopee"—

"He's washing dishes and baby clothes,
He's so ambitious he even sews."

Moon songs, river songs, silly-syllabic songs, songs about the old home and "Snookey Ookums," all come under Mr. Spaeth's hilarious eye.

• • • •

This is not to say he would consign the whole of modern popular song to the dustbin. He believes some will have "lasting merit," and specifies "The Long, Long Trail;" "The Man I Love" (by Gershwin); "Stormy Weather," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "Stardust," "My Silent Love," "Night and Day," and "Old Man River." These he thinks, have a genuine effectiveness.

But the impression he leaves us of the rest is not complimentary. Still, Mr. Spaeth is no wishful idealist. "In its reaction to entertainment of all kinds," he says as his last word, "the human race will probably never grow up. After all, why should it?"

Mr. Taft's Son

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

MR. CHARLES PHELPS TAFT 2d (Charlie Taft), son of the late William Howard Taft, President of the United States, has written an excellent book called "City Management—The Cincinnati Experiment."

President Taft's two sons, after taking highest honors in scholarship at Yale, entered public life, and have already done notable service, though their careers are only beginning. They are ideally fitted by brains and character to serve their country.

It is generally agreed that in municipal administration the United States has much to learn. About 25 years ago I heard Comptroller Metz of New York, say that the annual expenses of New York were larger than those of Paris, Berlin, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, put together. Thinking I must have misunderstood him, I got him to verify the statement right after the public meeting was over. Americans are so hardened to waste and inefficiency in the administration of cities, that we have come to take it as a matter of course and accept it as we do bad weather.

But after the resources of taxation shall have reached their limit, the time will come when these matters will have to be more seriously considered. Already the experiment of having a city manager has been tried here and there.

• • • •

Now this little book by Charles Taft is written with a combination of knowledge, expert investigation, hard-headed common sense, courage and humor; it is historical and practical, rather than theoretical. I should think every citizen of Ohio would read it, because the situation he describes is so well known in that State.

I want to recommend this book to all Americans who take a serious interest in political and economic problems.

Rabbit Fever's 'Cure' Scouted

LeCompte Calls Reports of Ohio Tularemia Serum the 'Bunk.'

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (AP).—Reports that Ohio State health officials have discovered a cure for tularemia, or "rabbit fever," were classed as "bunk" today by State Game Commissioner E. Lee LeCompte.

Commissioner LeCompte said he had been informed that Dr. H. G. Southard, director of the Ohio State health department, had perfected a serum to prevent rabbit fever and was conducting a free inoculation clinic at the University of Cincinnati.

LeCompte said he communicated immediately with Dr. Southard, and received in reply a letter from Dr. Lee Foshay, of Dr. Southard's staff, which characterized the report as "bunkum."

Dr. Foshay said he had developed a vaccine with which he was experimenting on volunteer students and men in exposed occupations, such as butchers, game skinners and market agents, but that it would "probably be several years" before definite information could be derived from the study.

Book About Hoover A Depressing Tale

Joslin's "Off the Record" Account Is a Defensive Championship of an Idol.

By Elliott Thurston.

HISTORIANS of the future may be able to catch Mr. Hoover in proper focus. In "Hoover Off the Record," by his former secretary, Theodore G. Joslin, much of which has appeared in magazine form, the picture presented is that of a much-misunderstood, much-abused President. It is a chronicle of martyrdom.

It is a depressing tale of a man against whom the fates seemed to plot perpetually with insatiable perversity. It is avowedly reportorial and yet it can hardly be called the last or the most accurate word of history. The author, long a newspaper man, sees his "chief" through adoring eyes. His book, striving to be reportorial, is defensive. Between the lines, and often in them, is passionate championship of an idol and bitter resentment against those who thought the idol's feet were of mortal clay.

To Mr. Joslin, Hoover remained the superman, the fount of all wisdom. All who opposed him seem to be moved by petty motives. Throughout, the author projects a sort of Sidney Carton. He quotes Mr. Hoover as saying, after his defeat:

"What I have tried to do during these years has been to save the American people from disaster. They do not know what they have missed. Because they do not know what they have missed, they are dissatisfied with what has been done. In such circumstances they turn to other leaders.

"A former European official recently observed that statesmen, in trying to prevent disaster, kill themselves off. He might say that my tactics have been wrong, that I should have waited until the American people were half-drowned and then have waded in and tried to save them. In such an event, they would, of course, have known what it was all about. But it would have meant catastrophe!"

• • • •

MR. JOSLIN strives now, if he did not before, to "humanize Hoover," and succeeds in bringing out numerous inconsistencies. Thus, he relates that Mr. Hoover was silent but not secretive, stoic in the face of trouble and exasperated by "trivial occurrences that he might well have ignored or laughed off."

He called "this office a compound hell" and yet (page 18), "he enjoyed the Presidency." At one moment he "ate crow," and at another lost his temper. Sometimes he "would go out of his way to pick a fight," but he "would not let himself be baited into a controversy, if he could possibly avoid it."

We are told that Mr. Hoover "had to originate practically every last recovery policy put forward during his Administration," that "he was about the only man doing any broad, constructive thinking." Measured against this conception, all other men in the world are made to seem small and blind.

Repeatedly Mr. Joslin hits at Congress, especially at the Democrats. They were playing politics, ignoring the country's welfare, thwarting Mr. Hoover's great dreams and plans! He singles out Mr. Garner for special attack, and charges Mr. Roosevelt with nothing short of a narrow kind of obstruction in the last days of the Hoover regime. "Mr. Roosevelt refuses to go along," is one chapter subheading. Mr. Roosevelt's letter suggesting a conference on the St. Lawrence waterway treaty is branded "patently a bid for publicity!"

A portrayal which gives the impression that Mr. Hoover stood nobly alone while almost everybody else meanly conspired against him, including his own party leaders, may seem accurate to a devoted friend who naturally resents the bitter criticism and vituperation to which Mr. Hoover was, by fatalistic irony, subjected. Yet it hardly puts the difficult and elusive figure of Mr. Hoover in historical focus.

• • • •

MM. JOSLIN'S colleagues of the press will be struck by the innumberable instances he cites of how the press was kept in ignorance of what was going on, how correspondents were put off by one pretext or another. The favorite device was to say that Mr. Hoover was "resting," whereas, it seems, he was up all night telephoning or working frantically, and secretly, to save the country.

Undoubtedly much had to be done in secret, yet the method, contrasting with the present regime, helps to explain why Mr. Hoover was not popular with the Washington correspondents. In retrospect, much of the secrecy now seems needless, as when Atlee Pomerene was covertly summoned to the Rapidan to be made RFC chairman.

"Of course," writes Mr. Joslin, "the press wanted to know that day what the President was doing. As usual, I had to say he was—"resting."

The New Deal comes in for much interlarded scorn. Mr. Hoover is represented as above politics and moved mainly in the last Presidential race by a patriotic duty to save the country from "the experimentations which he knew his successor would make." Alice Longworth's biting remark that "we have spent all of our lives trying to live up to father, and now we must spend all the rest of our lives trying to live down Franklin," is quoted with relish. This book can hardly be called a neutral piece of reporting.

It makes, nevertheless, interesting reading for those concerned with the history of the Hoover period. It evokes sympathy for the sufferings of a harrassed and overworked President who is made no less enigmatic by this close-up picture drawn by an ardent worshipper.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

One Year of Repeal.

America has had a year of repeal, and few people think it can be enforced. Prohibition ended nationally 12 months ago, but it is still pretty difficult to get any high-grade whisky.

• • • •

We may be drinking on the ground floor, but it still tastes like the old upstairs stuff.

• • • •

The ventilation is better, but the labels don't mean any more than they did under prohibition.

• • • •

The outstanding result of repeal has been to bring in what is known as "blends."

• • • •

A blend is any combination of liquids that won't burn the flesh or explode in the bottle.

• • • •

And some of the blends being sold with Federal approval today would have been thrown overboard by any old-time bootlegger as too cheap for his toughest customers.

• • • •

• • • •

When prohibition was voted dead it was expected that good whisky could come within the reach of all who wanted it. But all it did was to flood the market with funnier shaped bottles with more confusing labels.

• • • •

Under prohibition you felt certain you were being poisoned. Under repeal you're kept in continuous doubt.

• • • •

Repeal brought back elaborate bars, brass rails, the old-fashioned hair-part, open-faced drinking and free pretzels, but the 15-cent glass of bonded liquor is still invisible and the 5-cent glass of beer is a memory.

• • • •

There has been no increase in drunkenness, as only the rich can afford a bender. And the rich are getting plenty of headaches without drinking.

• • • •

Uncle Sam finds that the revenue from repeal is much less than expected. The bootlegger, he says, is still doing a big business.

• • • •

Blue 'Moon'

Payless U. S. Agents to Continued Bootleg War.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—Moonshiners, who were reported to have speeded up production when Federal agents in this territory were furloughed, were said to have taken to cover again with the announcement of Ralph S. Tagg, investigator of the alcohol tax unit, United States Treasury Department, stationed here, that he would remain here and continue to enforce the internal revenue liquor laws, taking a chance that Congress would make provisions later for his salary.

All other agents in Western Maryland have announced that they would do likewise, after they were informed that they will have the same authority to make arrests as before, even though they are to get no pay for the time being.

Although a parenthetical program note states that "the characters and incidents in this play are entirely fictitious," it obviously was suggested by the flight to Greece of the notorious "financier" whom the Chicago courts recently absolved of criminal responsibility for the collapse of his interlocking corporations and Arabian Nights promotions.

"Gather Ye Rosebuds" is a fantastic charade in which the central characters are an expatriated, pre-depression banker, whose projects have come to no good end, and an innocent appearing floor waiter, "of the student type," who turns out to be another self-exiled American of some renown, Noiseless Kelly, the machine gun bandit with 52 notches on his rod.

Mr. Noiseless Kelly feels a few honest compunctions about the first of the 52 notches, since it was his mother and in middle life he is beginning to suspect that he may not have been in every sense so dutiful a son as he might have been!

Two Souls With Single Thought.

Between these two slightly tarnished symbols of the contemporaneous American system there springs up a strong affinity. Both have dedicated their lives to the same end—one using a machine gun and automatics as his instruments of acquisition, the other resorting to what Mr. Noiseless Kelly denominates the less frank and honest method of employing salesmen.

Together they set up a new financial structure for the tiny Republic of Ionia, on the shores of the Aegean Sea. So adept are the natives at apprehending the principles of American stock market procedure in times of prosperity that they soon pile up a tremendous gold reserve, which is promptly pilfered by the director general of the First National Bank of Ionia for purposes of stock exchange speculation.

Mr. Noiseless Kelly, slightly in need of funds in order to remove himself from the imminent peril of the Ionian police, feels nothing but disgust and resentment that there is nothing left in the bank when he skillfully raids it with a jimmie and a can of nitroglycerine—"soup" in the picturesque patois of the underworld. And so it goes throughout the length of the play.

Is Penetrating Satire.

There can be no gainsaying with what penetrating satire Sidney Howard and Robert Littell have contrived the lines they place in the mouths of the farce's foremost figures.

They pillory the bankers, three national administrations, legal practices, the public attitude toward gunmen, extradition treaties, the New Deal, the public and, for good measure, introduce a dash or two of Freud and Nietsche, through the character of Mme Daphne Polyzoides—who married her uncle, had a son by the ship captain, who finally agrees to deport Benjamin J. Gatewood and Mr. Noiseless Kelly, and then was left a "widowed niece." Mr. Noiseless Kelly fascinates her.

A great many of the lines are hilariously funny, if one has kept at all abreast of the times. In many of them there is a bite and a sting—all of course, in a jocose spirit. If a grand idea for a farce is to suffer in public estimation, it will be because, as was done in "Bring on the Girls," as Washington saw it, the authors of "Gather Ye Rosebuds" have so over-exaggerated their premise and so burlesqued the subsequent developments that plausibility is destroyed and the piece becomes more an extravagant caricature than a believable likeness of the characters and commodities with which it deals.

Connolly-Truex Combine Clicks.

Its pivotal roles, needless to say, are handsomely played. Walter Connolly, returning to the stage after a long period of activity in the films, is a happy choice for the role of Gatewood, the discredited banker-promoter. His portrayal is keyed to a fine comedy note and is the beneficiary of some of the best speeches in the script.

No less can be said of Ernest Truex, in the role of Mr. Noiseless Kelly, who is not averse to beating up his women, now and again, and otherwise mixing something of the killer instinct with occasional bursts of poetry and a warm ardor for the beautiful things of life. Neither does Mr. Truex's part lack a clever line to match every one that is accorded Mr. Connolly. Together they provide an extremely glib and amusing evening.

Frederick Perry, admirable actor, as the American Minister to Ionia; Alfred Ilma, as the Ionian chief of police; Sally Bates, in the role of Daphne, the young woman with the bizarre complexes and fixations; Eduardo Cianelli, Alfred A. Hesse, Margaret Dale, as Mrs. Gatewood; Nicholas Soussanine, president of Ionia, and A. E. Dumont, captain of the S. S. Minotaur, all contribute earnestly and, at times, noisily, to the boisterous movement of a comedy that still can do with a bit of smoothing out.

Washington Chamber Music Society. Concert at the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker: Program: String quartet in G major (Beethoven), Intermezzo (Ippolitov-Ivanov), "Rosamund" entr'acte No. 2 (Schubert), "Promenade" (Musorgski-Pochon, piano quintet in F minor (Dohnanyi).

Whatever arguments may be advanced in favor of playing chamber music in large auditoriums for the dual purpose of popularization and revenue, the fact remains that room music, as Percy Grainger aptly renamed it, sounds at its best in the atmosphere of home. The beginning of the second season of these "candlelight" concerts by Jeno Sevely, Samuel Goldscher, Hendrik Essers and Howard Mitchell was welcomed by a goodly number of auditors ready for the quiet enjoyment of just such an hour of instrumental conversation as was provided for them.

Pleasant converse of a congenial foursome is exactly the impression one gains from the Beethoven quartet, one of the first half-dozen he wrote. Long ago, someone who could not resist the impulse to attach titles to absolute music, nicknamed this work the "Compliment" quartet because, in the phrases of the opening measures, one may hear in fancy the ceremonious greeting of an eighteenth-century gallant and the polite murmurs of reply.

One needs no mental image of this kind to enhance the savor of this fresh and delightful music, penned before Beethoven had entered his period of tribulation. If there is autobiography here, it tells only of happy and buoyant days. The music has definite kinship to Haydn and Mozart, and reveals little of the personality behind it. Even the cantabile of the slow movement is lightsome in its mood.

Of the three excerpts from Ivanov, Schubert and Musorgski, the least effective is the last. Even the skill of Mr. Pochon in transcribing for four strings the sturdy theme that introduces and links together the "Pictures at an Exhibition" does not succeed in capturing its essential quality. Musorgski thought this promenade out in pianistic terms, and to tamper with its original dynamics is to modify the pedestrian gait.

Mrs. Gertrude Nash joined the string players in the reading of Erno von Dohnanyi's romantic quintet. The composer has changed his idiom radically since he wrote this Opus 1, which is thoroughly steeped in traditions both of melody and harmony. Were he to disown it now, however, as a youthful essay in poetics, we would lose some very pleasant and enjoyable music. It has vitality, and its ideation reveals an ingenious mind.

ONE YEAR AGO TODAY!

DUE to your dauntless leadership—your foresight and vision—a great American industry was reborn one year ago today. Just one year ago today . . . but how far-reaching have been the benefits resulting from that judicious step one year ago today!

Nearly $400,000,000 paid to U. S. Treasury

From a source of taxes, which throughout fourteen years lay untapped, nearly four hundred million dollars have flowed into the treasury of the United States . . . since just one year ago today.

This figure represents only Federal revenue on the wine, beer and liquor industries. In addition, millions of dollars in State and local taxes on this newly born industry have supplied new sources of income to assist in the task of balancing budgets.

Million Re-Employed

Approximately one million American men and women have found employment as a direct result of Repeal. Not merely in the industry itself thousands of packers, shippers, bottlers, office workers and salesmen have found employment, but even remotely allied trades . . . the lumber, painting, plumbing and building industries . . . transportation and electric light and power companies . . . have welcomed this sorely needed impetus to their business.

Thousands of property owners have found occupants for their stores. Manufacturers of machinery and equipment have found new buyers. Hotels and restaurants are now employing more help and purchasing more equipment than a year ago today.

More than $1,000,000 a day income added to the U. S. Treasury

We are pleased to call to the attention of the American people this fulfillment of its action of one year ago today.

Kitty Wagner Leads Gayety At La Paree

Club Chantecler Boasts Irish Tenor; Shoreham Has New Talent.

By Kay Ware.

La Paree's Winter Garden Revue continues this week, with girls, dances, songs, and fancy costumes. Kitty Wagner, Harlow the second, leads the show, and does a soft shoe waltz with her partner, Bill Berney.

But with all the girls, none of them take away any of the applause from Marie Fowler, who gets more and more appealing to the town's night clubbers. Best of all, she's a "regular," being one of Emory Daugherty's musical crowd.

Club Chantecler, aside from having chromium rocking chairs, a pretty hostess, who is French and looks Spanish, and Don Gomez, an organist, boasts of a tenor with a way of singing and an amusing life story. John Shevlin, Irish and smiling, started singing ten years ago. Before that time he had been a boxer . . . still likes it. Found a voice, started concertizing six months after his first lesson . . . was the "shadow-voice" for Fiske O'Hara, the Irish singing actor, when the latter got too old to warble. Mr. Shevlin stood in the wings, sang, while O'Hara opened his mouth on the stage.

Got 85 requests for "Irish Eyes Are Smiling," in a recent broadcast. In spite of this, he says "I was billed as an Irish tenor once, and couldn't get a job." Accent is very slight in speaking, delightfully subtle in singing . . .

Gave concerts in Germany, Paris, all over United States. Sings on national hook-ups . . . Favorite song, "Trees," because he thinks it's one of the finest pieces of musical and verbal workmanship he's ever heard.

Get him to tell you about his experience with the German impresario. Ask him to sing "Sometime," if you're feeling sentimental.

Latest addition to Shoreham's floor show: Janette Hackett and Ivan Triesault. The latter is Russian, as his name suggests. Miss Hackett is an American, featured in many sections of the country. They do the Merry Widow waltz, a Continental number and others.

Ewen Hail continues as M. C. and singer, Horton Spurr is eccentric and funny; Toma Genaro, an acrobatic dancer, completes the show. Barnee leads the orchestra and Cyrilla Adelaide Tuite sings.

Tango hour, plus Tiny's piano, and smart songs in the lounge make you forget your dinner date. Tiny has jokes as well as songs, and most of them you've never heard before.

Club Michel—Frank McCormick, M. C. Ruth Kidd, singer and impersonator; Paxton and Parks, two girls who dance a la "Harlemania;" Gene Dolova, dancer, and Vera Volkner, ditto.

The Don Cossack Russian Choir stormed into Club Troika Sunday after their concert and enjoyed an authentic Russian meal. Always rising to emergencies, the club pushed tables together, poured extra vodka and turned the house over to the Cossacks.

Also, Ivan Dunnaev, Russian novelist and playwright, dropped in, accompanied by a party from the Russian Embassy.

Add to the show: Mme. Sablukova, former prima donna at the Moscow Arts Theater.

If you don't know blini, make the acquaintance of these thin, tender pancackes, served with molten butter, caviar and sour cream.

Casino Russe opens December 7, instead of today, as previously stated.

Dinner dancing at Child's Casa Rita is the best solution for the date when you don't want to dress, go uptown, or hunt up a parking space. Jimmy Santmeyer's Orchestra furnishing the music for dancin; Tony, the accordionist, strolls between tables with request numbers; Libby Rowland cheers the Southern heart; Sammy Richardson, singer, tries to get all the request numbers into an evening.

Club Carlton is called "a rhapsody in hue." It's a good gag, because it pulls all the silver, gold, blue, red, white and green into three words. Also, it describes the "colorful" music of Sidney's unit, the delicate jewel shades of a Dubonnet, Martini or Carlton special.

For an afternoon or evening when you want "swish."

Along with other novelty ballroom dances, is this "Carlo" shown in a local movie going to be a fad? It's in five-four time, a bit more subtle than the three-four waltz, or four-four fox-trot.

Could two hearts beat in five-four time when four feet are trying to move as one?

At Madrillon: Frank Bernard and Marion Rich, dance team, recently featured at the Paramount Grill and Roxy's Theater, in New York. Also featured in Paris, Berlin, Rome, the Italian and French Rivieras. They present a musical comedy novelty and a modern waltz.

Leon just returned from a Maryland shooting expedition. Brought back two dilapidated quail. Said "They were all the quail I saw, and a fella can't shoot what he can't see."

The Cansinos backed out on Heigh-Ho, and now Eugenie Woodruff and James Struthers are dancing there. The Cansinos were held over in Chicago, hence the postponement.

This supper club rated recognition for its swankiness in this month's issue of "Fortune." That is something like getting into a night club Who's Who.

Maryland Club Garden's Club l'Hiver will go in for international dinners: Sunday, Russian; Monday, Spanish; Tuesday, Hungarian, etc. The nifty menus with complete lists of courses and nation's you may take home to tack up on the wall.

This fancy fare starts next Sunday.

If you want a dinner that's exceptionally good, and dancing to go along with it, stop out at the Broadmoor's Silver Grill. The proprietor, Marius Manon, is an internationally famous chef, with a knack for making food delicious and people happy. A joyful atmosphere prevades the place, probably a reflection of the good nature and hospitality of the manager.

State in Liquor Traffic Flayed

Virginia Antisaloon Head Says Even Wets Worried Over the Record.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—In a statement prompted by the first anniversary of national prohibition law repeal, the Rev. E. J. Richardson, superintendent of the Antisaloon League of Virginia today asserted that "even militant wets are worried by the record" of liquor control in Virginia thus far.

"If repeal is ever a success," he said, "it has a very, very long way to go."

In the statement he referred to the State entering the liquor traffic, saying this has "lowered moral standards and encouraged the false claim that it is O. K. for a church member to sell liquor for the State, but not as a saloon keeper."

Other charges against the control system were that it established the "institution" of the "bar-maid," for the first time in the United States; made it respectable for women and children to frequent dispensaries, increased public drinking and drunken driving; put the sale of liquor under the noses, in residential sections, of many who voted for repeal, and showed that ABC liquor makes people just as drunk as bootleg liquor.

Jurors at Richmond To Probe Bank Failure

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—A grand jury investigation of the failure of the $20,000,000 American Bank & Trust Co. of Richmond will be conducted at the January term of hustings court, Judge John L. Ingram said today.

His statement was made after Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon had informed the court he was ready to proceed with an investigation of criminal liability for the bank's closing. Judge Ingram said the better part of a month would be required for the investigation and it would be manifestly unfair to ask jurors to undertake such an investigation this month with the Christmas holidays approaching.

Du Pont Contrasts Dealing With War And State Units

One opinion of the difference in doing business with the State and War Departments was defined here late yesterday before the Senate Munitions Committee by Irenee du Pont, of the Du Pont company, the Associated Press reported.

"Our men found," Du Pont said, "that the State Department never would say yes or no while the War Department always said yes."

"Student Tour" Is Reviewed, "College Rhythm" Previewed and Dates Scrambled

Maxine Doyle Happily Cast in Musical Picture

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

"STUDENT TOUR." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by George Seaton, Arthur Bloch and Samuel Marx, adapted to the screen by Ralph Spence and Philip Dunne, featuring Charles Butterworth, Maxine Doyle and Jimmy Durante, with Phil Regan, Florine McKinney, Monte Blue, Nelson Eddy and Florence and Alvarez. Music and lyrics by Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed; dances by Chester Hale. Produced by L. Monta Bell and directed by Charles F. Reisner. Reviewed Monday morning.

By Nelson B. Bell.

There is, perhaps, too great a diversity of subject matter in "Student Tour" for its own good.

Beginning with the winning of an important boat race by the crew of a fictitious American college, the picture then resolves itself into an attempt on the part of the class in philosophy to atone for a 100 per cent failure in making the grade, while on a world tour intended, finally, to land the school's entire enrollment in England, via China, India and points between and beyond, for an international race with Leftbridge.

The heterogeneous mixture of episodes in the manner of all the countries visited, a scrambled romance aboard ship—with the demure little niece and secretary of Prof. Lippincott masquerading as an especially fascinating young Pierrette at the masquerade ball, given in lieu of the usual "ship's concert"—the extraneous comedy interpolations of the Messrs. Charles Butterworth and Jimmy Durante and "The Carlo," an elaborately staged musical interruption, presented during the Monte Carlo sequences of the play, all tend to diffuse themselves rather than coalesce into a closely knit and compact dramatic narrative.

Like Big Vaudeville Bill.

This is not to say, however, that a majority of the pictured episodes do not possess intrinsic merit as individual exhibits. There is a great deal of genuinely amusing entertainment in "Student Tour," but not more than half enough actual drama to hold it together.

Charles Butterworth, in the role of the meek little professor of philosophy, is acutely ridiculous, as he always is. Jimmy Durante, as his accomplice in the perpetration of a vast number of insane comedy "gags," plays with his customary zest but in this picture is never any funnier than his lines, which are not uniformly outstanding examples of inspired writing.

The surprise of the picture is Maxine Doyle, who here has a far greater opportunity than she has had in any other film Washington has seen. Maxine's acting, at times, may be just a little perfunctory, but she does such a variety of engaging things during the development of the sketchy story that her performance adds up to a remarkably high score for one who has had such a brief experience before the cameras.

Maxine Reveals Versatility.

She sings with fine effect, executes a clever dance or two and in her character delineation alternates between the mouse-like secretary and the beautiful Pierrette who dazzles everyone at the masquerade ball.

To cap the climax of her versatility she finally serves as coxswain of the college crew in the boat race in England, singing them into a rhythmic stroke that wins by a scant quarter-length.

More definitely than anything in which she has heretofore appeared locally, "Student Tour" gives positive evidence of a future in the films for Miss Doyle.

In the opposite role of the stroke oar, Phil Regan plays well and sings better, and Florine McKinney as the feminine "menace" comports herself with fine skill and irresistible lure for the men in the goings-on.

Nelson Eddy Scores.

The Monte Carlo scene is distinguished by the singing of "The Carlo" by that eminent barytone, Nelson Eddy, accompanied by a huge orchestra and assisted by a brilliant ensemble that is made further notable by the dancing of Florence and Alvarez, who make "The Carlo" a little too intricate for mass consumption as a dance that may be easily adapted to the casual ballroom.

Among the songs that will be liked best are "A New Moon Over My Shoulder," sung by both Phil Regan and Maxine Doyle; the song Regan sings before the "filling station" in India that turns out to be the Taj Mahal, and Maxine's "Fight 'Em," which wins the boat race.

A new issue of "Goofy Movies," enlivened by Pete Smith's biting comment; one of Hal Roach's "Weekly Movie Views," in which Irvin S. Cobb, the famous humorist, is a prominent figure, and the newsreel supplement the feature, which after all, deserves to run longer than through Thursday night, when it will close to make way for George M. Cohan's "Gambling."

This morning at 11:45 o'clock, "Flirtation Walk," which took possession of the Metropolitan screen at one unreeling last night, will begin its regular continuous performances in accordance with the habitual "all day grind" policy of the house.

It will be recalled that this is the best of the costellar vehicles for the combined talents of Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler and relates a story that has its genesis in the picturesque Hawaiian Islands and its final fadeout at the United States Military Academy at West Point, where something over half of the action of the play takes place.

"Flirtation Walk" embodies some tuneful songs, some of Hawaii's most colorful native rituals and the stirring spectacle of West Point's daily routine and dress parades.

We are perfectly willing to recommit ourself to the statement published in the original review of this picture when it played the Earle that it is the best of its kind ever made.

Takoma Group to Act.

At the meeting of the Little Theater of Takoma Park to be held in the Takoma Grade School on Philadelphia avenue tomorrow night at 8 o'clock, two one-act plays will be presented—"The Violin Maker of Cremona," by Francois Coppee, and "The Slamatan," by Mrs. Minnie Frost Rands, chairman of the drama group of the D. C. branch of the League of American Pen Women.

"The Violin Maker of Cremona" is based upon a theme of deep human interest and wil be performed by W. T. Forster, H. M. Smythe, Miss Clara Mae Tarbett and P. L. Greaves.

"The Slamatar" is a play based upon life in the Colonial East Indies, where Mrs. Rands lived for several years. The story revolves about an American family and its relations with the native Javanese and some resident Dutch.

Included in the cast will be Mrs. Carl Hartley, Mrs. Byron M. Coon and Miss Janet Coon, of the Roadside Theater Co., and John Sikken, of the Roof Players, who appeared in the title role of the Willard production of "The Drunkard" and more recently in Edward de S. Melcher's "44 Below." Mrs. Rands also will be a member of the cast.

Aroused by the threat against his practically unblemished record, offered out of a clear sky by the sudden abandonment of playing schedules by both Warner Brothers' Metropolitan and Loew's Columbia, Manager Hardie Meakin leaps to the defense of his prerogatives by announcing that "Imitation of Life," with Claudette Colbert and Warren William as its stars, will open at RKO-Keiths's tomorrow instead of Friday, as originally announced.

This is none of Master Meakin's doing, but will come about in conformity with a ukase sent down from the New York home office of RKO on the Holy Sabbath.

It is worth mentioning that "Imitation of Life" was written by Fannie Hurst, whose "Back Street" still remains one of the memorable films of recent seasons. It is modestly claimed that "Imitation of Life" is just as good.

"College Rhythm" Has It.

While we are on the topic of new pictures, paste a sticker in the band of your hat, reminding you not to miss "College Rhythm" when it comes along—and it won't be long now.

When previewed in the projection room of the Fox Film Exchange yesterday afternoon, while "Student Tour" was still drumming its catchy tunes into our musical consciousness, if any, it seemed to me that "College Rhythm" lives up to its name by striking and maintaining an especially brisk and breezy tempo.

It begins and ends with football sequences, filmed in the Rose Bowl, with thousands of spectators occupying the stands. Thus at both ends of the footage are scenes of the utmost excitement.

In between these rousing competitive intervals of the story are interlarded some thoroughly new ideas of how a great city department store best may be conducted.

Of all the dizzy sequences, these probably are the screwiest that ever found their way into celluloid. Jazz bands, chorus girls, glee clubs and what not contribute to the commercial success of Stacey's Emporium.

As a sideline, several romances are carried along, and, through it all, Joe Penner rambles around doing his familiar vocal tricks and lugging a duck, Goo-Goo, along as mascot for everybody with whom he happens to be associated at the moment.

A Statement of Policy by NATIONAL DISTILLERS

(ON THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF REPEAL)

On October 17, 1933—a little more than one eventful year ago—people opened their newspapers and encountered the heartening pledge and challenge of the words which follow here:

"It seems certain now that repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will become effective this present year.

Thoughtful men and women are already asking, what will happen then?

It is a question you can answer—and we can answer—each in our own way.

The first part of our answer is based on the clear recognition that the American people are not voting liquor in, but Prohibition out.

We recognize there have been serious abuses in the past.

We recognize also that there will doubtless be some abuses in the future, since men and women are still fallible and Utopia is not yet here.

But we recognize most clearly of all that good policy and good taste alike dictate that we oppose these abuses by every means we may properly employ.

To that end we pledge ourselves to stand, in every phase of our business, for moderation and not abuse—for temperance instead of excess—for the strict observance not merely of legal duty, but of moral duty as well.

It goes without saying that no product which bears our emblem will be sold unless it is as good in quality and in purity as science and our skill can make it.

So much for our part of the answer—now how about yours?

Will you not join with us, and by using your new freedom wisely and temperately, help to safeguard the privilege which hopeful American men and women now are voting to give into our common care?"

With confidence born of experience, we repeat this sound statement of policy for the year ahead

Houghtons' Home Scene Of Reception

Members of English Speaking Union Are Entertained.

Mrs. Bruce Wallace Aids Couple in Receiving Guests.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The handsome Georgian home of Mr. and Mrs. Alanson B. Houghton on Massachusetts avenue was the scene of a large reception and tea yesterday afternoon. Mr. Houghton, former United States Ambassador to Great Britain, and Mrs. Houghton entertained the members of the English-Speaking Union, of which Mr. Houghton is president.

The house, set back from Washington's most distinguished thoroughfare, and just opposite the British Embassy, is one of the most beautiful homes here. It is surrounded by spacious lawns and formal gardens of rare boxwood. Inside the wide hall are pieces of fine Georgian furniture, and several handsome gilt-framed mirrors.

Mr. and Mrs. Houghton received their guests in a small drawing room, assisted by Mrs. Bruce Wallace, Secretary of the English-Speaking Union in Washington. Mrs. Houghton wore a gown of black tulip crepe fashioned with long sleeves and a simple neckline. Mrs. Wallace was in black velvet with a small hat to match. The room attracted the admiration and interest of the guests for it is furnished with antique chairs of Beauvais tapestry, tables and settees of the Louis XIV period, and hangings of soft rose and gold brocade which harmonized perfectly with the soft rich tones of the tapestries.

Autographed Pictures of Royalty.

On the piano are autographed pictures of King George and Queen Mary, the latter wearing with her handsome gown the same tiara which the Duchess of Kent wore at her recent wedding in London. Over the mantel is a fine portrait of Mrs. Houghton, who wears a gown of Alice blue, which also tones in with the colors of the room. All the walls of the house are white, and the beautiful doorways made further decoration very simple.

In the dining room, where long French windows open on to a wide terrace leading to a formal garden, the tea table was spread with a variety of delicious sandwiches and cake. A bowl of silver filled with deep red roses, and massive silver candelabra with long white tapers, were the only decoration. At either end murals, paneled in gilt, masses of flowers, glass-inclosed cabinets of wonderful china, a few handsome tapestries, and chairs covered with needlepoint completed the room. There large groups of guests gathered to sip tea, taste the delicious claret punch and to chat of the benefits of the English-Speaking Union.

Fine Collection of Etchings.

In the large drawing room, paneled with bookcases and hung with rose brocaded curtains, guests sat in groups or wandered on into Mr. Houghton's study, which contains a fine collection of the etchings of Axel Haig, framed in dark wood.

Among those glimpsed in the large gathering were Mrs. Owen J. Roberts, wife of Associate Justice Roberts, with her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts. They have recently returned from their country home near Kimberton, Pa., to join the justice in their Georgetown home. Also seen were Miss Marvin Breckinridge, the Minister to the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph Close, Representative and Mrs. James M. Beck, Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, Mrs. Maxim Karolik, Mrs. William Fitch Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Hubbard, Mrs. Effingham Townsend, Mrs. Oscar Jarecki, Mrs. James Ellwood Jones and her sister, Mrs. Karl Borntraeger; Baroness von Buelow, Mrs. Victor Kauffmann, Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann and Mrs. Francis Walker.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Bette Hartz, that young lady who is extremely busy these days taking pains with the details of her party December 19, was discussing it the other afternoon. She announced that after having kept an eye on the fashions of her friends' gowns and having discovered the existence of numerous trains—she has just about decided that the proper place for the party would be that good old edifice that is the first to greet and the last to wave farewell — the Union Station.

Bill Merriam is almost convinced that the evening affairs of the younger set are like school because that is where one meets his old companions of the triple R days.

It isn't that Washington and Baltimore are growing (they are, but that is not the real reason) nor that some one has discovered lightning gasoline, that has been shortening the highway between the two cities. It is just such parties as the three that have been given there this season and attended by Capitalites that have cut miles off the asphalt. By the time the next soiree or ball is over the Maryland city will be so near one will have to cross the Potomac, going south to get to it, at least that is what Sylvine Clagett, Meg McMullen, Jane Esther Platt, Mary Jane Stanley, Bill Sweet and Gerard Guilfoyle would have one believe and they refer all doubters to Mrs. McMullen, Mrs. King and Mrs. Platt, who also attended the recent German.

E. S. Campbell And Miss Cotton Wed in Seattle

Bridegroom Has Many Friends in Capital; His Parents Now Here.

The arrival of Vice Admiral and Mrs. Edward Hale Campbell gives added interest to the announcement of the wedding of their son, Mr. Edward Strong Campbell, and Miss Emily Robertson Cotton, in Seattle, Wash., a few days ago, Mr. Campbell has passed considerable time in Washington and has many friends here.

The former Miss Cotton is the daughter of Mrs. Cotton and the late Capt. Charles Stanhope Cotton, jr., and a granddaughter of the late Rear Admiral and Mrs. Charles Stanhope Cotton. The wedding took place at Mrs. James Hamilton de Veuve's home in Seattle, and the service was read by Capt. T. B. Thompson, of the Puget Sound Navy Yard, before an altar decorated with white and cream chrysanthemums.

The bride wore a Lucien Le Long model of ivory duchesse satin made on princess lines with a petal train, a high cowl neckline and long tight sleeves. Her tulle veil was inset with heirloom rose point lace and was worn with a lace cap with clusters of orange blossoms. White orchids and lilies of the valley were in her bouquet. Apple green taffeta was worn by the maid of honor, Miss Fritzi Swanstrom, and delicate yellow taffeta by Miss Mary Lou Hendry, the bridesmaid. Mrs. Cotton wore a black and white costume, and Mrs. Campbell was gowned in white velvet and chiffon.

Mr. Stanley Jones was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Lightner Smith and Mr. Joseph Gandy.

Presiding at the bride's table, centered with white rosebuds, were Mrs. Halligan, wife of Admiral John Halligan, and Mrs. Joshua Green. Assisting were Mrs. Garland Weldon Collins and Miss Georgina Swanstrom, Miss Frances James and Miss Ruth Glass.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell will be at home after December 15 at 3814 East Lee street, Seattle.

Miss Edythe Ledogar arrived yesterday, accompanied by Miss Linda Burtis. They are at the Wardman Park Hotel. They are from New York City.

Unusual Place Markers.

The long table was decorated with yellow and golden chrysanthemums arranged in three large centerpieces. Between them green ferns were scattered about the bases of green glass candlesticks which held tall yellow tapers. At each place there was a corsage of tea roses. The place markers were most unusual. They were tiny china creatures, a different one for each guest. They were placed upon small blocks of teakwood upon which the name was written in white ink.

Miss Patterson had on an afternoon frock of gold brocaded crepe made on tailored lines with a smart little standing collar, which was finished in the front with a Buster Brown bow of brown velvet. Her hat of the same shade of velvet was made Cossack fashion, trimmed with a tiny bird made of bright feathers. Her brown velvet strap pumps were trimmed across the vamp with a row of alternating brown and gold rings.

Black and White Tunic Frock.

The guest of honor wore a smart tunic frock of black and white. The tunic of white satin shot with silver fastened down the front with flat round buttons of brilliants. Her small close-fitting hat of white velvet was trimmed with a black and white wing.

Mrs. Patterson's guests at another table were Mrs. W. B. Spinks, Mrs. William Laird Dunlop, jr., Miss Margaret Hart, Mrs. Newton Brewer and Mrs. Neitah King.

Skill, Patience and Practice Are Necessary In Operating a Hospital for Broken Dolls

Shop Conducted In Washington By Mrs. Rogers

Building Is Stacked to Ceiling With Boxes of Needed Parts.

A fractured skull a dislocated knee, a sudden and complete baldness, the loss of an eye—all are vital casualties in the doll world. Like human surgery, the doll doctor must be skillful, patient and practiced.

This is the third of a series of articles pertaining to dolls.

By Katherine Smith.

COME what may—Patsy, Twinkletoes, Saucy Sue or Shirley Temple, there's still lots of room in the world for old dolls. And Mrs. F. B. Rogers, who runs the Northeast Doll Hospital, has plenty of old ones to repair.

Her little shop is stacked to the ceiling with boxes of arms, legs, torsos, heads, all grotesquely sticking out at unnatural and incompleted curves and angles. New wigs are tucked away in tissue paper, waiting to transform a battered face. Trays of eyes, limpid and glassy, stare through the dust; hands grope for an arm to grow upon.

And it was because of these doll parts and the work of "Pop" Stunkle, who died last spring, that his daughter, Mrs. Rogers, took over the business and mends dolls.

"You can't buy these parts now," she explained. "Some were made years ago in Germany. The old bisuqe heads can't be replaced today. My father mended dolls for 40 years, collected the parts for the now out-dated hinged dolls, and since there was a demand in the neighborhood, I put out my sign and kept up the work.

Gets Many Jointed Dolls.

"Oddly enough, this year every other doll I receive is an old jointed doll. They haven't been making them for years and I can't understand why I get so many. Look." She held up one as large as a 5-year-old child. "This is very old and all these," she pointed to a row of headless babies, all jointed at hip, knee, shoulder and elbow.

Here is a chocolate brown one, here a dirty and battered stuffed body; pink, newly enameled cheeks shine under new curled wigs.

"This one," Mrs. Rogers picked up a small cheaply made doll, "was brought in by a wealthy woman for repairs. It needs a new wig, but I can't put it on, because the owner won't let me. Obviously, the woman can afford to give her child a new and expensive doll, but this is a favorite, very much so."

"The old stories about weeping children and broken babies is fiction. Children seldom come into the shop, the mothers bring the dolls. However, childlike devotion is strong. Once a woman from the West Coast asked me to mend a doll for her daughter. She said she would send it to me, but after months had passed I thought she had forgotten about it. Fnially she came in one day with an old doll, told me her daughter couldn't part with it long enough to have it mended. So, during the few days of their visit here, I laid everything else aside and put through a rush order."

Another Customer.

At this moment the door opened. Another customer. Mrs. Rogers opened the package, smiled. "Look, another jointed doll."

As she talked, Mrs. Rogers set a pair of blue eyes in a tiny head, making them fast with plaster of paris. Then the top of the head was fitted down, the glue stick moved around the crown, before the ears a golden wig was pulled over and snapped into place with an elastic.

"There, she'll look very nice," said Mrs. Rogers, patting the curls in place. "Some child will be awfully happy. This was her old head of hair." She pointed to a tiny wisp, hardly big enough to be a scalp lock.

"This is a very simple job to do," she continued. "It's the movable eyes that drive me wild. They have to be worked carefully around in the plaster so they will slide just right. Every Christmas I go frantic with those moving eyes.

Stringing Is Difficult.

"Stringing isn't so easy either. It looks as if it ought to be simple, but it takes an expert to do it properly. Otherwise the joints loosen, well—you know what happens."

In the matter of wigs, each doll needs to be fitted individually. Perhaps just a matter of glueing, or setting on the china brow.

"Long curls are still popular," Mrs. Rogers said. "I don't know why. I had a doll with curls like that when I was little, but I cut them off and made a boy. I was pretty much of a tomboy, anyway, and didn't play with dolls very often."

Mild soap and water is best for enamel complexions. Mrs. Rogers recommends it. "Though, of course, when the baby has completely lost its youthful bloom, enamel is the only thing that can restore it," she added.

Tomorrow—Theodore Tiller, the marionettist.

Butter Production Light.

A rather light production of butter and manufactured products this winter is forecast by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. A decrease in the number of milk cows, a shortage of feed, and low prices of diary products in relation to for the comparatively light production.

Too many paths
And not enough seats;
Parks are more slyly unrestful
Than streets.

While putting on the finishing touches, Mrs. F. B. Rogers, proprietor of the Northeast Doll Hospital, tells of the experiences in her work; its origin, difficulties and compensations. Pictured are a few of the many jointed dolls that have come to her shop for repairs.

Mother and Daughter Collaborate In Turning Out Popular Songs

Mrs. J. T. H. Mitchell Is Creator of Melody, Ann, of Lyrics.

WHEN A MILLIONAIRE society woman at middle age turns to creative work, it is not a phenomenon in these days. But when such a woman becomes half of a mother-and-daughter "team" that invades a highly competitive field and turns out popular songs where, in some instances, experienced frequenters of Tin Pan Alley fail—that is something else again.

Yet Mrs. J. T. H. Mitchell, of New York and Greenwich, Conn., is doing exactly that. With the help of her attractive daughter, Ann Mitchell—who writes lyrics for her mother's compositions—Mrs. Mitchell, the society woman, is making a name for herself as Heart Mitchell, the song writer.

Yesterday, at the Willard Hotel, the daughter explained why her mother had launched this career only in the last few years.

"You see it was this way," she began. "Mother had been educated as a pianist and wanted to go on the concert stage. But she didn't."

Talent Comes in Handy.

"Because at that time," Mrs. Mitchell added, "giving public performances wasn't quite the thing for a woman—at least my mother didn't think so. As I remember it now, that was the only thing I was denied in my girlhood."

"But now," the daughter went on proudly, "her musical ability is coming in handy. Where for a number of years she has composed numbers and played them just for the entertainment of our friends, she is now going into it seriously. Last summer, for instance, she did the music for 14 songs."

"And Ann wrote all the words," said Mrs. Mitchell. "It was really one of the busiest summers we've ever spent."

Both of the Mitchells admitted it would have been difficult to write so many songs in such a short time if they had stayed either in New York or in their summer home in Greenwich where they know so many people. That is why they closed their apartment in New York and their house in Greenwich and went to Europe. After taking a house on the Riviera, they settled down to work.

"About the only persons we knew, living close by, were the Oppenheims," Mrs. Mitchell said. "And talking to E. Phillips Oppenheim and his charming wife inspired us to work even harder. Well, anyway, we finished the songs, and now we're going to see how they come out."

It would seem they are "coming out" rather well. One, entitled "You Are the Sweetest Girl I Ever Knew," presented to a group of friends Monday and to the public over the radio last night, has aroused the enthusiasm of virtually everybody who has heard it.

"Eddie Peabody was one of the first persons who encouraged mother to write down some of her compositions," said Ann Mitchell." Soon I was writing some words to fit the melodies and now we're both grateful to Eddie because he got us started."

Mr. Peabody, in turn, is convinced the Mitchells are headed for fame as song writers.

"If I know what the public likes, this ditty about 'My Sweetest Girl' is going over with a bang," he confided at a party at the Mayflower recently. "And other songs by the Mitchells are just as good").

Carer Begun in Earnest After Composing Number To Entertain Friends.

Two society favorites of Greenwich, Conn., and New York, now visiting in Washington, are gaining success as writers of popular songs. Mrs. Heart Mitchell composes the melodies. Her debutante daughter, Miss Ann Mitchell (above) writes the words.

Judging from this and other enthusiastic comments from critics of popular music, it would see the team of Mitchell and Mitchell, probably the only one of its kind that is not in the game for commercial gain, is headed for success. Unusual in many respects, this "team" is unique in that each component is eager for the other to receive the major part of the credit.

Mrs. Peabody Impartial.

Sometimes the words of a song put it over. Other times it's the melody that counts," explained Ann Mitchell (who writes the words).

"If our songs are really successful, it will be because of the appealing words," said Heart Mitchell (who writes the melody).

But Mrs. Peabody, wife of Eddie and close friend of the Mitchells, was impartial. "The songs of Ann and Heart have both appealing words and a catchy melody. They have a double chance to be hits."

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Thank you for printing that Sunday letter from Mary Smith. It was just the jolt I needed. I have been feeling sorry for myself ever since I came to Washington and I suddenly realized that I have been wanting something for nothing. I took a brace on myself at once and went to the Town Hall last night, and at least saw wonderfully alert people and heard a lot of things.

• • • •

I'm still lonesome and I expect to be for a while yet, as I am choosey, but I realize that I have wasted a lot of time in damn foolishness. I'm going fishing where the fish bite. Thanks a lot. Sincerely,

FRANCES F.

• • • •

DEAR FRANCES F.: Thank you for your gallant letter. Your ability to take Mary Smith's comment and mine on the chin and come up fighting means that half the battle to conquer your loneliness is won. I am printing your letter in the hope your attitude may do for other lonely persons what Mary Smith's contribution has done for you. M. H.

Was Dinner Successful?

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Won't you tell us who couldn't get to the Strangers' Thanksgiving Dinner how things went, please? I was so anxious to go, but no mode of transportation presented itself. I am some 40 miles from Washington. Many times I've wondered how "Faith" made out. I know so well how she felt. Best wishes to you.

ADMIRER.

• • • •

DEAR ADMIRER: Newspaper and radio accounts of the Strangers' Thanksgiving Dinner record it as having been a successful affair, conducted on a pleasantly well bred plane, and attracting in the neighborhood of 100 gusets, who were described as being, for the most part, members of the "New Dealers'" group of Government workers. Other guests included a few long-term residents of Washington, who came to extend a welcoming hand to strangers in the city.

• • • •

Several persons telephoned me to say how much they had enjoyed the evening, and I had letters from others, expressing similar sentiments. One such letter follows. As for "Faith," whose letter has created something of a stir among column readers, I have had no communication from her other than the one printed November 29. M. H.

• • • •

Guest Says It Was.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have just returned from what has been, as you will no doubt hear from all sides, a most enjoyable evening at the Strangers' Thanksgiving Dinner. In compliment to Dr. Grace A. Thompson, who was so active in arranging the dinner, I wish to say what a delightful affair it was.

The caliber of the people present was of the highest, most of those I met being college graduates located here in pursuit of some special work.

• • • •

No doubt there were many who thought they would like to attend, but hesitated. So the old adage again is proved: "He who hesitates is lost." For I believe that everyone present enjoyed the affair from start to finish, and those who hesitated to go missed a very pleasant evening. Yours truly, L. V. D.

Doctors to Graft New Eyes on Boy, 2

A 2-year-old boy in London is shortly to undergo the same operation which recently restored sight to Dr. Axel Munthe, Swedish author, the London Morning Post reports.

"The operation," says the newspaper, "consists in taking a healthy cornea and grafting it onto the eye of the patient, whose only trouble is the condition of the cornea. Blindness can therefore be cured in this way if the eye in all other respects is in sound condition."

Strictly Speaking

What About These?

1. Does the "g" in gyroscope have the sound of "j?"
2. Was the dodo a real or a fabulous bird?
3. Where is Mauritius and how is it pronounced?
4. Is this sentence correct: "I do not doubt but that he will be there?"

Answers Here.

1. Yes. Gyroscope is correctly called JI-ro-skope, not GI-ro-skope.
2. The dodo was a real bird, known to have survived in Mauritius until 1681.
3. An island in the Indian Ocean belonging to Great Britain. It was formerly called Ile de France (EEL de FRAHNS) "Isle of France." Pronounced mo-RISH-i-us. (The first "i" is as in "it.")
4. No. The "but" is superfluous. The sentence should read, "I do not doubt that he will be there."

Hands Require Frequent Use Of Beauty Aids

By Frances Mangum.

FROM THE STYLE angle the little hand muffs are another evidence of the back-to-elegance movement. From the beauty angle they mark a sensible fashion that will mean less chapping, less redness and more hand loveliness.

Always in the winter women have relied on thin gloves which looked well but offered little or no protection. In addition, these gloves were often so tight they constricted circulation and contributed to red hands.

Avoid Gloves That Pinch.

Since hands are such essentially lovely features, we owe it to ourselves to bring out their loveliness in every way possible. Wearing over-tight gloves is no way to begin. Choose them to fit as closely as is comfortable, but when they pinch, the danger signal sounds. On very cold days take advantage of the very feminine and chic muffs and keep your hands out of the severe cold as much as possible.

Even an eye to this outward hand care isn't sufficient. You must still remember that hands require creams and lotions, just as the face does. Because you do housework don't feel that lovely hands are out of your reach. Many women who sweep, dust and wash dishes every day have far smoother and whiter hands than whose who don't. This is chiefly because they take more care of their hands between times.

Keep Lotion Handy.

The housewife should keep a small bottle of lotion by her kitchen sink and another in the bathroom. After she has finished her clean-up job on the dishes she should rub the lotion on her hands. During the day whenever she washes her hands she should rub on more lotion. It soon becames a matter of routine.

A small bottle of olive oil costs little and proves a big help in keeping the cuticle soft. Twice a week, soak the tips of your fingers in a little bowl of it, and then push the skin back from the nails. You'll find you need fewer manicures, and even these you can give yourself quite successfully.

Leg Covering Held Child Health Aid

Children's legs should be covered in the winter time unless the youngsters have perfect health and are able to resist the effects of extremely cold weather, believes Dr. J. Bruce McCreary, deputy secretary of health in Pennsylvania.

A large number of small children in following the present bare-legged fashion will probably be subjected to undue exposure this winter, Dr. McCreary pointed out in a recent article in Capitol News.

What Today Means

By Mary Blake.
"Sagittarius."

IF DECEMBER 5 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:15 a. m. to 12:15 p. m. from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 6:15 to 8:15 p. m.

December 5's influence perhaps will cause a number of people to be very temperamental. Their feelings may be acutely sensitive, readily hurt by the slightest provocation, so in both business and social contacts be cautious your manners or remarks are so circumspect that they will give no offense.

A very promising day for all forms of social activities, so invitations can be accepted without much danger of the affair being tiresome or uninteresting. Married and engaged couples, as well as sweethearts, will find this possibly a very good day on which to obtain cooperation or consent for something to which there has hitherto been opposition.

If a woman and December 5 is your birthday, you possibly are more spiritually than materially minded. Day dreams may be very enjoyable but are a decided handicap to any one who wishes to succeed in either business or a profession, so be careful how you indulge in them. You are likely to have many friends come to you with their confidences, feeling their trust will never be violated. You will earn their gratitude if what they tell is regarded as something that can not be disclosed under ordinary circumstances. Teaching, needlework, stenography, bookkeeping, acting as a receptionist offer lines of work that might prove congenial. Matrimony may serve to solve many problems, as well as providing loving companionship.

Barclay's Art Evolves 'Trick' Gifts for Yule

By Ruth Anne Davis.

ARTIST McClelland Barclay no longer confines his efforts to painting lusciously lovely women whose come-hither eyes beckon from magazine covers. Now he also bends his talents in less pictorial ways to sculpture bulbous-eyed frogs on water lilies and acorns on oak leaves.

Models of his new craft are attracting shoppers and shopseers to the gift section of a local store to admire the exquisite and interesting workmanship. Mr. Barclay demonstrates his business acumen by turning out these pieces in practical form. The silvery green oak leaf is sufficiently deep to serve as an ash tray. The acorn is both ornament and cigarette rest. Little frogs fill the same purpose where they rest on traylike water lily leaves. More leaves, a bright gold, decorate the sides of book ends.

These practical ornaments are priced to come within the budget limits of most Christmas shoppers.

Artificial Blooms.

It was with genuine pride that the buyer of the flower department of a downtown store surveyed her mercantile garden. She had carefully arranged her floral display and was rewarded by the throng of shoppers who, attracted by the bright colors of the artificial blooms, lingered to buy.

In all the throng of flowers it was hard to decide just which was the loveliest, but the buyer who knew each bouquet lifted a certain one from the group. "This is exclusive with us," she said. "There may be similar ones, but none identical, and certainly none at this price." This was a bouquet of field flowers ranging in color from the palest, most delicate blue, to deep crimson. The blossoms, although artificial, looked amazingly real. A small metal container held them in a loose, graceful bunch, all ready to be placed in bowl or vase. Women who experience difficulty in arranging attractive centerpieces from loose flowers will appreciate what a boon this is. Connoisseurs of artificial flowers will applaud the price.

Gloves for Children.

Children are strangely capricious creatures. They like this, dislike that, apparently with no substantial reason. Parents on the other hand, rationalize their preferences. At the glove counter in a local store it is interesting to observe the children who are enthusiastic over the fleece-lined gloves priced at $1. "They look like Daddy's," say some. "I could throw snowballs in those," say others. With parents it's a different story. They generally agree that here are durable, warm, neat-looking gloves at an exceptionally reasonable price.

They come in brown or tan leather, and are lined with soft, warm fleece. Sizes from one to nine.

Make-Up Mirrors.

Make-up, like the little girl with a curl in the middle of her forehead, is very good when it's good, but when it's bad it's horrid. And yet look what happens. At least 60 of every 100 women are content to have their brow pencils roughly applied, their lipstick heavy in spots, light in others, their mascara smeared, their rouge two round circles, and their powder caked. Strange as it seems, these women aren't wholly to be blamed. They survey themselves in the mirror and all looks well. Satisfied, they leave their dressing table. The mirror is at fault. Without proper light, several feet away, a mirror tells the most outrageous fibs. That is why the make-up mirrors selling now for $1 are rightfully popular.

The mirror is set in a small ivory frame that perches upright on your dressing table. Over and under the mirror are strips of frosted glass. A light in the back shines through and illumines your face so that you see a frank and revealing reflection in the mirror.

Candlerettes.

Men who might not observe a new dress, or even note their wives' recently visited beauty parlors are extremely sensitive to odors. When they return home in the evening, hungry and ready for dinner the smell of a broiling steak, or boiling cabbage is apt to please them, but after dinner it annoys. For that reason, if no other, the wise housewife will find some fragrant candlerettes an excellent investment.

These are small wax burners in pottery containers. When they're new the wicks are practically on a level with the top but as they burn and melt the wax the wicks fall lower and lower. They give out a soft light and a most pleasing aroma. Those sold at a downtown store come in pine and three flower fragrances.

"Character Dolls."

"Russian character dolls" are carefully dressed to portray picture book types of red-checked, full-robed peasants. They come in several sizes ranging from 20 cents to $3.50 to suit budgets, tight and elastic.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Refusing Two Overtricks.

In a rubber game, the declarer should not risk his contract to try for overtricks—even when there is a 10-to-1 chance that he can make two more tricks than he contracted for. On the hand below a loquacious kibitzer rebuked South for making only three no trump when five-odd could have been made without much difficulty. As usual, I must disagree with the kibitzer. South can only be praised for taking the absolutely safe play for three.

1♠	Pass	2◇	Pass
3◇ (1)	Pass	3NT (2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—North here had his choice of two bids. He could have simply rebid his spades, but chose to raise his partner's diamond bid because he desired to make a stronger call. A simple rebid of two sapdes would be a minimum rebid and the raise to three diamonds must be taken as encouraging.

2—A slight gamble by South in view of the lack of protection in the heart suit, but one which is definitely justified. North on his diamond raise is looking for a game in either notrump or diamonds, and since South is far too weak both in honor-tricks and distribution to see any hope of an eleven-trick game in diamonds, he decides to gamble on three notrump and count on his partner for the necessary heart stopper. North, of course, if his hand is unsuited for notrump, can always return to four diamonds.

Against the three-notrump contract West opened the heart King and this trick was won by dummy's Ace. Five rounds of diamonds were now laid down and then the spade Jack, which, not being covered by West, won this trick. At this point South stopped and counted. He had already won one heart trick, five diamond tricks and one spade trick, had another certain trick in the spade Ace, and knew he could surely develop another trick—his ninth—by leading up to the heart Jack. South accordingly, after his spade Jack held, led a low heart. West went up with the Queen, and South eventually just made his three-notrump contract as he never took a second spade finesse.

It is easily seen by inspecting all four hands that South could have made five-odd by merely continuing with the spade suit. However, South was not playing in a match point duplicate game and his slogan was: "The contract's the thing." He had no assurance that the East player was not holding off with the spade King when the Jack held the first trick. He further did not know which hand held the club Ace. Accordingly, he visualized that if he continued spades, East, having held off on the first round, might capture the second spade trick and then shift to clubs. South would now be shut out of dummy and the opponents would be able to run five tricks before he hmiself got nine. The fact that the cards were so distributed that none of this could come to pass does not alter the correctness of South's play. He insured three notrump and that was all he cared about.

Dishes Devised To Place Milk In Daily Menus

Housewives' Ingenuity Can Overcome Objections to Its Taste.

By Dorothea Duncan.

DON'T SAY "what a bore" when food authorities quote, "A quart of milk a day for children and a pint a day for adults." Milk may not appeal to everyone's fancy as a beverage, but the fact can't be overlooked that it is the most nearly perfect food for human consumption. The main thing to be remembered is that milk is a valuable and necessary part of a well balanced diet. The housewife must then use her ingenuity to devise dishes that can be cooked with milk. In this way milk can be introduced into the daily menus so disguised that the family will not be bored with its constant appearance.

Many women make the common mistake of separating the cream from the milk and giving the cream to the adults for their coffee or tea and the skimmed milk to the children to drink. This doesn't mean that milk need always be used as whole milk, but everyone in the family should have the benefit of the whole milk. The cream is rich in butter fat, and though it is an important part of the milk it doesn't supply all the necessary parts of this food. Skimmed milk is deficient in butter fat, and, therefore, doesn't provide all the food properties that the body should derive from whole milk. Be sure then that each member of the family is getting his required amount of whole milk.

Milk for Breakfast.

Consider what can be done with milk for breakfast. If it is too chilly to drink cold milk, serve it in the form of hot chocolate or cocoa or as one of the various prepared chocolate beverages that are sold under trade names. Cooked cereal is excellent if prepared with milk or half milk and half water instead of all water. This gives the housewife an excellent opportunity to use skimmed milk, provided the cooked cereal is served with butter or top milk or cream. Egg dishes include milk, as do quick breads—waffles, muffins, biscuits, etc.

Cream soups work into the luncheon menu these cold days and they are particularly popular with children. Custards of all sorts, whether baked or cooked, serve as excellent disguises for milk. Leftover vegetables, meats and fish can be presented attractively in cream dishes. Ice creams, milk sherbets, cake, filled pies and cookies offer many ways of including milk in the daily menus.

Breakfast Menu.

Sliced oranges and bananas
Whole wheat cereal prepared with milk and served with butter
Poached egg on toast
Cafe au lait Cocoa (for children

Luncheon Menu.

Creamed peas and dried beef in patty shells
Grapefruit and cucumber salad with French dressing
Cookies
Tea Milk (for children)

Dinner Menu.

Broiled sirloin steak
Mashed potatoes
French artichokes with Hollandaise sauce
Hearts of lettuce with cooked salad dressing
Bread and butter
Floating island
Coffee Milk (for children)

Cafe au Lait—make a medium or strong coffee by the drip or percolator method and while it is being prepared scald an equal amount of fresh milk. Pour the coffee and hot milk together into the cups in equal amounts, one pot in each hand.

How to Keep Well

Bright's Disease.

EVERY one is familiar with the term Bright's disease—some of us all too familiar. Richard Bright first identified kidney disease as a common cause of several widely divergent conditions, such as dropsy, apoplexy, uremia, and certain types of acute inflammation. He was in his day Britain's most distinguished physician and ablest clinical observer, and his description of nephritis has not been improved upon nor corrected in the light of medical progress, although much detail has been added.

Modern medicine now applies the term Bright's disease to a slowly progressive degeneration of the kidney structure. In general Bright's disease is called nephritis and implies inflammation or injury to the delicate kidney tissues. The disease ranks third or fourth among causes of death, and is a contributing factor in many cases of ill health. It handicaps the individual affected, as he is rarely able to work at normal efficiency.

Infections, particularly of the nose, throat, and bronchi, most often precede the development of nephritis; of these tonsilitis is the principal culprit and the streptococcus is usually the guilty organism. Occasionally the beginning of the disease may be traced to overexposure to cold or to inclement weather leading to a marked drop in body resistance.

Practically all chronic conditions are preceded by an acute stage. Although many persons apparently recover from the acute phase without the slightest damage to the kidney, evidences of the disease may reappear in later years if the body is subjected to abuse.

Two types of chronic nephritis are recognized: one with swelling of the tissues and one without. Chronic nephritis with edema (collection of fluid in the tissues) is quite characteristic. The skin of the legs may be swollen to the bursting point, the eyes swollen shut, and water may accumulate in the lungs, causing difficulty in breathing. There is a loss of strength, and digestive disturbances and headache usually appear. At first the heart muscle is not seriously involved. Later some damage to heart and blood vessels ensues. Albumin is usually present in the urine in generous amounts and the functioning power of the kidneys is gradually decreased.

In nephritis without swelling of the tissues there is generally a considerable rise in blood pressure, first noticed after the patient has passed his fortieth year. There is also noted a loss of weight, loss of strength, decrease in initiative. In many cases the blood pressure will rise as high as 250 and occasionally hemorrhages from the nose will occur. Sooner or later enlargement of the heart can be detected and with the passing of time shortness of breath is noted.

The treatment of any manifestation of kidney disease consists in eliminating foci of infection. Every effort must be made to avoid fatigue, hence physical as well as mental effort should be governed by the amount of fatigue it produces. Diet holds out the greatest promise. Protein should not be eliminated from the diet, but in general should be slightly restricted. Sodium chloride (common salt) should be definitely limited, and potassium chloride may be substituted. If there are signs of swelling of the tissues the amount of fluid taken with or between meals should be reduced.

If the individual who has Bright's disease can regulate his activities, his diet and his rest, the outlook is hopeful for many years of comfort with reasonable activity. The kidneys may be safeguarded just as one would protect a damaged hand or foot. If the body is not pushed beyond the capacity of the undamaged kidney tissue to function life may be preserved for many years.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

GLAZANOFF shrugged. "She will know that it was because of you, chere amie. Ollie insulted me in Harry's Bar. She will also know that it will look to others as if it were for her." He paused. "She will be angry and afraid, jealous and vindictive. Therefore you will have a great enemy. And I—shall shall be in Rome." Lightly, caressingly he lifted Jocelyn's hand, touched his lips to it. His lazy, charming smile took him to the door.

Dressed for Dinner.

Jocelyn went thoughtfully back to her room. Would she never rid herself of the endless wake of intrigue that followed Rita! It had been decent of Boris to warn her of the scene in Harry's Bar, which must have driven Rita wild.

She dressed thoughtfully — and shivered a little as she rode in the taxi to Ciro's for Rita's dinner.

But when her taxi drew up at the lights of Ciro's, Jocelyn stepped out, shining, finely tempered as steel. Her free, graceful walk carried her through the shifting pattern of groups with a nod and a smile for familiar faces.

Rita and her guests were there, standing around a large, rose-garlanded table. No sign of Ollie, but Rita in her dead whites and blacks struck an arresting note among the shirt fronts and tails of the men. The only person Jocelyn saw was Ogden Temple. His huge figure loomed above all others, the bulk of his shoulders rode tiaras and chiffons. Even as she stared, he turned his head. Across the room, the commanding blue of his eyes singled her out like a beacon light from a mountain.

Warning Signal.

For a second Jocelyn felt faint as the power of the man rushed upon her. No woman could lightly discard Temple. That he was here tonight meant that he had not given her up.

Her head high, Jocelyn advanced toward the table. Temple's eyes were still fastened upon her, upon the clinging line of her gown that, tapering from the slope of her shoulders, the curve of her young breast, fell and flared from her long waist.

Her approach drew other eyes. A vague constraint like a glaze seemed to settle on guarded faces.

Ogden Temple moved, rearing behind her without a word.

Then Rita turned very slowly. It was almost as if she had ordered a hush among her other guests. Her long, black lashes curled back from her eyes like deep blue jewels studded in her small white face.

"I'm sorry," she said. "I'm afraid there has been a mistake." Every word fell freezing in the air. "After what happened yesterday, I hear Prince Glazanoff left for Rome—and really, I didn't expect you tonight."

Mary Derby lay on her bed, staring at the July moon pasted on a flat sky. She lay in white-flowered pajamas, her elbows crooked high on the pillow, her smooth, coppery head cupped in her palms. It was only 9 o'clock and the evening stretched like an arid desert before her. Three days since she had seen or heard from Dick Crane.

Of course, she should never have gone to his apartment that night, knowing the mood he was in. Now even the hope of friendship was spoiled. For she had further steeled him against her and all she could do for him. He would rather starve, she thought bitterly, than try for the Webb & Hoppin account, merely because she happened to be advertising manager there. All the more maddening to realize that he could do it—he could plan a campaign that would spread their exclusive furniture from the poor of Park avenue through homes whose budgets were beginning to expand. But no! Proud—obstinate—rotting away in a tiny room on Eleventh street, nibbling his heart out for a wife who had let him down.

"Oh, why can't he love me!" Mary cried aloud to the quiet room. What was the use of being a success in business when your private life hollowed your heart to emptiness? Just another unattached woman, with an unhappy divorce behind her, a yearning for a real home and friends she could dine and week-end with.

Doorbell Rang.

It might have been so very wonderful if Dick had listened to her. Both of them scarred, lonely, and so much to do, to build. Mary's light blue eyes flickered to green as, restlessly, she got up and wandered into the living room.

She might have sold those pearls and be in partnership with Dick now if it hadn't been for Jocelyn.

The whirr of her doorbell started her around, tight and listening. It rang again. Her heart quickening, Mary caught up her boyish tailored dressing gown and pressed the buzzer. All that stifling day she had felt there would be a message from Dick when she got home.

She opened the door a crack to listen. No presence on the stairs of the pleasant three-storied house.

Stepping into the hall, she called: "Who's there?"

"Dick. May I come up?" His voice sounded from below, steady but urgent.

"Dick! Of course you can!" Mary left the door open and flew to her room to fumble in her closet. Two trim blue tailored suits that were Mrs. Derby of office hours. Two evening gowns that were Mary Derby entertaining and being entertained. Odds and ends in a gamut of the blues she always wore.

She heard him come into the living room, and, with the shutting of the outer door, thrillingly he seemed given over to her home, her atmosphere.

No time to dress. "Be with you in a moment," she tried to say quietly. From its hanger she pulled at the one thing she could easily slip over her flowered pajamas—a long, full Chinese coat of old blue silk embroidered in gold and orange. A touch of powder, of lipstick, of perfume. In the mirror her face glowed in elfin brilliance, lit by her red hair.

"It was good of you to see me," he said gravely.

He looked marvelous tonight—more like the old Dick.

"I want money," he said, moving nearer, his chin thrust forward. "And I want it in a hurry, Mary. I'm going after that Webb & Hoppin account."

Wanted No Help.

"Oh, my dear, I'm so——"

But he didn't let her finish. "I'm going for it under one condition, though—hands off from you. No talk, no influence. I've a whale of a campaign planned," he said, and his eyebrows seemed to bear down on her. "Working day and night with perhaps one man—and I know the man—for the art stuff, and I can get it done in a week. But it goes through the usual channels."

"That's all right with me, Dick," Mary answered very simply, but she turned away to hide the light in her eyes. Dear, silly boy, she was the usual channel in the Webb & Hoppin office.

Dick went on with a vitality to his voice that Mary had not heard since the night Jocelyn sailed off with the Keenes on the Ile de France. "As soon as it's on the street that you're not renewing Gryce's contract, you'll have plenty of agencies soliciting. The more the merrier," he said. "Don't think I don't know that you have a large say-so in that office. Look here, Mary——" And now he was very close to her, looking down at her secret little face. "Let me work this out in my own way, will you? Don't push or pull for me, will you?"

Mary Gave Promise.

His putting it so was another matter. Mary tilted back her smooth head. "I promise," she said. And loyally in her mind she promised herself to be true to her word. She would hand the stuff over to Mr. Finch without comment.

"Thanks, Mary." Dick's crooked little smile tore at her heart. He watched her as she walked to the shining little kitchen, the embroidered blue coat swinging over the wide flowered white of her pajamas. His hand dug in his pocket, fingering something else which had brought him here. The room, with its deep, tranquil blues, its yellow lights and flowers spraying from bowls, stirred him strangely tonight. And Mary——

"These came this morning."

From his pocket he handed her a letter and a small box. "What's left of your necklace is in the box. The letter is from Jocelyn," he said slowly. "I don't suppose it's quite the thing, but I want you to read it."

Mary pushed the box aside and walked to the couch to curl under the yellow-shaded lamp. Her fingers were icy. She wanted to read the letter and she didn't want to. She stared at the French stamp, at Jocelyn's fine, flowing writing on the envelope—Richard Crane, Esq., and his office address. It summed up, like a sharp dagger thrust, Jocelyn's high-bred beauty, the grace and poise that Mary had always secretly envied.

"I sort of hate to——" she murmured.

It was worse than the love letter Mary had dreaded to read, for Jocelyn in her desperate pain had sent her cry unadorned. The whole fantastic story was there—why Jocelyn had gone to Ogden Temple's chateau the night before Dick sailed, and how Temple, in his mad, dominating passion, had locked her among his priceless collection of jewels until it was too late to join Dick.

Husband Adopts Name Of New York Bride

Most women are pleased to have their last names changed upon entering matrimony. A recent bride in New York, however, not only kept her own name, but permitted her husband to assume it also. Thus when John H. Service married Beatrice Manning he became John H. Manning.

Compulsory Examination Before Marriage Sought

All applicants for marriage licenses should undergo physical and mental examination, in the opinion of the West Virginia Public Health Council. The council is now trying to get through legislation which would make such examinations compulsory.

DESPITE advance protests of "canned opera," Chase and Sanborn's Opera Guild, opening with John Charles Thomas in the leading role of "Rigoletto" last Sunday on WRC at 8 p. m., demonstrated that this classical art can be made intelligible and entertaining even if performed in English from one-hour scripts.

The only immediate drawback exists in the sensations one feels in hearing favorite arias, such as the last act quartet "Fairest Daughter of the Graces," sung in English. The music itself was written for Italian phrases. When singers must inject less pleasing English cadences into music by Verdi, the opera suffers.

Essential dramatic sequences were well acted and sung, however, by the cast in "Rigoletto." Hearing the plot unfold in English makes it all comparatively simple for audiences who heretofore have attended grand opera nervously fingering liberettos. Their pleasure alone is the music and the art of the singers.

This series, therefore, presents something new which will be welcomed by the average listener but shunned, likely, by died-in-the-wool operagoers. The Guild's offering next Sunday will be Verdi's "Aida" with Helen Jepson, Frederick Jagel, Roderick Cross, and others.

WITH the intent to transmit the normal vocal activities of seals and penguins to American listeners, attaches at the Byrd Expedition have marshalled microphones and equipment for such a concert tonight at 10 o'clock on WJSV.

So far the permanent residents of Antarctica just sit and stare, dumbly, at the equipment and men. Byrd's men have whistled, yodeled, squealed, beaten pans together, waved torches and played an accordion in an attempt to wring sounds from these new broadcast stars. Latest advices from Little America, however, bring assurance that the seals and penguins will have been trained into volubility in time.

MUCH forensic fire will be unloosed tonight in honor of first anniversary of repeal when Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York, and Dr. Clarence True Wilson, head of the Methodist Board of Temperance and Public Morals, line up on opposite sides in a debate.

Dr. Wilson will take the affirmative, and New York's dynamic mayor the negative, when both take the mat over the question: Resolved, That the cause of temperance is better served by prohibition than by existing laws.

N. B. C.'s New York office has turned thumbs down on a "big story" which WRC had hoped to "break" with usual fanfare. Seems WRC had engaged an expert, who claimed to analyze character at a glance, for a daily series. But after all was arranged, the time selected and publicity sent out, it developed that the Federal Communications Commission, overseers of what's good for the radio public, wouldn't let the idea go through. It was held that "character analysis" lies in the same category as phrenology, mind reading, palmistry and other alleged "bunk" theories, and therefore, couldn't be foisted upon listeners.

"Station Breaks."

Ronald Dawson's contest with listeners to select a suitable theme song for his Northern Dramatic Company begins tomorrow with announcements to be made after his broadcast on WOL at 6:45 p. m. of "And Life Goes On," a play concerning itself with the disastrous effect of circumstantial evidence on the lives of the innocent . . . WJSV has a letter from an infuriated listener clamoring for Earl Merriman to return with his 6:30 a. m. "Eye Opener." Earl tried his darndest to make the program awful, but succeeded, unwittingly, in making it popular . . . Mary Burke, WRC stenog, has been appointed private secretary to N. B. C.'s busiest local executive, Shannon Allen . . . Intimate word pictures of the great and the near-great will be retailed over WOL today at 5 p. m. by Ted Zittel, journalist, from the fund of his long experience. His first subject is roly-poly Heywood Broun . . . Everett Marshall returns to "Broadway Varieties" today at 8 p. m. on WJSV after a two weeks' absence . . . W. W. Jacob's dramatic one-act play, "The Monkey's Paw," beloved of Little Theater groups, will be presented today on Rudy Vallee's spot at 8 p. m. on WRC with Walter Huston in the lead. Same program will unearth Harry Costello, the original for "Popeye the Sailor" . . . Ted Kimball, WMAL's astute interviewer, who yesterday ad-libbed with Phil Rigg over the latter's exploits in a 52-foot ketch, has but recently returned from N. B. C.'s New York Radio City. Ted conferred with ace interviewer William Lundell over tricks of extracting what's requisite from subjects before the mike. Ted plans, in the near future, to do an interview with Dr. Robert Connor, newly appointed chief archivist . . . Yvonne Gall, Parisian opera soprano, closes her engagement with Paul Whiteman's Music Hall tomorrow at 10 p. m. on WRC with the Jewel Song from "Faust."

Congressmen Find Record Shortage In Capital Homes

The housing problem already has become a real one for members of the seventy-fourth Congress, the United Press says. They are returning to the Capital to face one of the worst housing shortages in history. The shortage exists not only in higher income housing but in lowest-priced habitable dwellings.

A survey indicated last night that there are fewer than 200 vacant apartments in the city. Rents on space available is beyond the income of most minor Government officials. More than 25,000 workers have been added to the Federal payroll under the New Deal and realty operators have done little building.

The Roosevelts to Hold House Warming Friday

Completion of the new White House executive offices will be observed with a "family house warming" Friday afternoon, Mrs. Roosevelt said yesterday.

The President will return from Warm Springs, Ga., tomorrow, and has set the following day for a little jubilation over and inspection of his new place to work.

The party will be in the nature of a tea and only the White House staff will participate.

Girls Aloft Four Days On Endurance Flight

Oklahoma City, Dec. 4 (AP).—More than a third to the way to their time goal of 10 days and a new endurance flying record for women, Jean La Rene and Henrietta Sumner lolled in their aerial merry-go-round above Wiley Post Airport here today. The girls took off Friday.

Their manager, Kenneth Hunter, himself the holder of the men's endurance title, 23 days, said Miss Sumner was recovering from a brief illness.

Two Trainmen Killed In Head-on Collision

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 4 (AP).—Two trainmen were killed and eight track workers injured today in a head-on collision of two Long Island Railroad freight trains in a cut under Brooklyn avenue.

The dead were the engineer and oiler of the first of four elecrtic locomotives pulling a westbound 16-car train, which collided with a steam locomotive pulling an eastbound five-car train.

Maryland Gets Back Prisoner From Joliet

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 4 (AP).—James Connelly, alias Jack Hart, an escaped convict from the Maryland State penitentiary, was paroled today from the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet and turned over to Maryland officials.

Gov. Horner approved Maryland's request for the extradition of Connelly, who escaped from that State's penitentiary in 1929 while serving a life sentence for murder.

Lost 40 pounds—feel fit as a Fiddle

I simply couldn't go through with all those kicking and bending exercises—they wore me out.

Then I tried to diet—but it didn't seem fair. I simply adore chocolate cake—and why should I have to give it up when all my slender friends eat it regularly and never seem to gain a pound?

Finally I learned about a simple corrective for abnormal obesity, known and prescribed by physicians the world over. —A corrective that would change the food I ate into energy instead of excess fat! And I learned that it was put up in convenient tablets containing exactly the right quantity—by one of the best-known medical laboratories in the United States.

And so I took Marmola—4 tablets a day—and quickly my excess fat began to disappear. What delighted me even more was the way I felt as a result of taking it—so mentally alert, so full of pep!

Now I'm down to normal—and never again will I let myself put on that deadening load of useless fat. Whenever I start to gain again, I take Marmola. It keeps my weight exactly right.

Thousands of women who have reduced the Marmola way might well tell you that story. Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased. Could you ask for any better recommendation than that?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

Mayor Asks Nice to Aid Funds Fight

Jackson, of Baltimore, Says $823,000 Due for Tax Relief.

Ritchie's Refusal Forces City to Protest to Governor-Elect.

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (AP).—Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore today turned to Gov.-Elect Harry W. Nice for $823,000 he claims is due the city from the State's 1934 relief pool. His claim was denied 10 days ago by Gov. Ritchie and the Board of Public Works.

Inclosing correspondence with Gov. Ritchie, Jackson wrote Nice he was ready to take the matter up with him at any time. Nice declined to make any comment until he had received and read the mayor's letter.

The sum in dispute is the balance of the city's $1,500,000 share of a $3,000,000 pool raised by the State. Half of the total went to the counties for tax reductions. And the balance was to be spent for unemployment relief in the city.

Only $677,000 was spent to finance the $12,000,000 unemployment relief bond issue during the last year, and Ritchie and the Public Works Board hold the $823,000 should be kept available for possible future use for unemployment relief.

Mayor Jackson holds the money should be turned over to the city without delay to be used for tax relief—the same purpose to which the counties' share was put. He estimates an 8-cent reduction in the city tax rate next year would be possible with the money.

Funds Shortage Not Affecting Bonds, Claim

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (Spl.).—The recent statement of Governor-elect Harry W. Nice of Maryland, that the financial plight of the State roads commission would necessitate new taxes on the people of the State has drawn a sharp reply from William D. Byron, Democratic member of the roads group.

Byron said the present commission, had it continued in office, would probably have asked the legislature to authorize issuance of $3,000,000 worth of new road debentures. These debentures, he said, can be guaranteed by the revenue from commercial hire licenses in excess of that pledged for the redemption of the present $4,000,000 debenture issue.

Byron said approximately half of the money obtained from the new issue could be used to pay for surfacing the new Philadelphia road, thus releasing for the commission's current operations about $1,500,000 now set aside for that purpose.

Byron said news of the commission's cash shortage has not affected and would not affect the value of such bonds.

He said he would recommend to the commission sale of the remaining debentures so that funds obtained from them could be turned over to the Federal Government at par value. The commission, he said, would thus get the premium for the bonds which would amount to several thousand dollars and would give the roads unit some additional cash on hand.

Girl, 13, Is Held As Check Forger

Accused of Signing Name of Bank Director.

Waynesboro, Pa., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—A 13-year-old Waynesboro girl, whose name is being withheld by police, has been apprehended as a check forger, police disclosed today.

The girl allegedly removed a check from a mail box at the home of Frank Barnett, forged the name of the man on the back and presented it at the Citizens National Bank & Trust Co. for payment. Mr. Barnett is a director of the bank, and a teller knew that he had been in Canada for several days on a vacation. After making the payment, the teller notified police and the girl was apprehended.

Due to the girl's age, police and bank officials are not expected to press the case.

Conference Seeks Purified Streams

Virginia to Take Part in Capital Parley.

Virginia will be represented Thursday at a conference called by Secretary Dern on Federal stream purification, the Associated Press reported.

Joseph J. Baecher, president of the Norfolk Chapter, Izaak Walton League, will represent Gov. Peery. Representative Robertson, of Lexington, an ardent sportsman and former chairman of the State game and inland fisheries commission, also has been asked to participate.

One proposal to be considered is to request President Roosevelt to name a watershed commission. Another would extend the power of the Secretary of War to control dumping into streams.

Forgery Reveals A Bank Account Long Forgotten

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 4 (AP). Theodore Romesburg has discovered he has $116.73 on deposit in a local bank—an account he never knew he possessed. The fact was brought to his attention when police were investigating the activities of a forger, who passed checks against Romesburg's account, in Hanover, Pa., recently.

Although Romesburg at first denied the account was his, he later learned his wife had made several deposits years ago, but had forgotten about them.

Convicts' Use Curb Backed By Virginians

State Labor Chief and Head of Union Support Shirley's Views.

Front Royal, Va., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—John Hopkins Hall, State Commissioner of Labor; his assistant, H. W. Furlow, and J. B. Rapp, of Clifton Forge, president of the Virginia Federation of Labor, today joined William E. Carson, chairman of the State Commission on Conservation and Development, in indorsing the plea of Henry G. Shirley, chairman of the State Highway Commission, for the relief of the highway department from its $3,000,000 convict labor burden.

Mr. Shirley, in a recent statement, said convict labor is inefficient and does not justify the expenditure necessary for its maintenance. He said the highway department will be unable to match the $2,500,000 Federal allocation for 1935 if convict labor is continued, as this type does not meet Federal requirements.

Mr. Hall yesterday, in Richmond, also advocated abandonment of the use of convicts on the State highways and is in accord with Chairman Carson, concurred with Mr. Shirley, and suggested that convicts be used in State parks, building roads into inaccessible territory, etc.

"I think convict labor should be used by the State for State use only and not in competition with private enterprise," he declared.

Mr. Rapp, at Clifton Forge, gave out a statement last night approving the views of Chairman Carson.

Peery Confident He Can Match U. S. Fund

Richmond, Dec. 4 (AP).—Confidence that a way could be found to enable the highway department to match Federal fund allocations next year was expressed today by Gov. Peery as he began a close study of Commissioner H. G. Shirley's suggestion that the highway department be relieved of the burden of maintaining convict road forces.

The Governor pointed out that the problem referred to by Mr. Shirley was of matching Federal funds expected to be allocated during the State's next fiscal year, which does not begin until July 1, 1935.

He spoke, too, of anticipated increases in highway department revenues and conferred this afternoon with John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, who furnished figures showing that so far in the present calendar year increased gas tax revenues have more than balanced decreased revenues from the lowered license fees and produced a net revenue gain of approximately $192,000.

The State prison board, members of which had expressed opposition to Mr. Shirley's proposal to do away with convict road camps, met in the executive offices this afternoon, but the chief executive said they did not discuss this matter.

Gov. Peery said he felt Virginia was "not in such bad shape" financially and that a solution to the highway fund problem could be reached before it became acute.

Answering questions about the proposal regarding a transfer of the convict road forces, he rejected as "impracticable" a suggestion by William E. Carson, chairman of the conservation and development commission, that they be used for park development work. In addition to the difficulty of employing any number of convicts on undeveloped land or on roads where they could not be kept in compact groups, the Governor pointed out that the cost of their maintenance still would have to be met and that "the conservation and development commission is worse off for funds than the highway department."

The executive said he was not sure whether the highway department could be relieved of the care of convicts without legislative action.

McWane Transfers To Culpeper Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 4 (Spl.). Transfer of L. L. McWane, clerk of the city council and chief clerk in the local State Highway department office, to the Culpeper highway office was effected yesterday despite protests of Fredericksburg civic leaders.

Mr. McWane moved here 12 years ago and has since been highly active in civic and fraternal affairs. His proposed transfer was officially protested by the city council in a letter to the State highway department.

Percy Ross, of Culpeper, will replace Mr. McWane here. The city council clerk will continue his duties here when the council is in session.

Maryland News Told in Brief

(Associated Press.)

Williamsport. — Otho Delauter ended a converstion with Mrs. Roy Miller on her farm near here, walked a few steps away, looked back, and discovered Mrs. Miller had disappeared. With the aid of a chain, Delauter manged to haul the woman out of 4 feet of water into which she fell when a cistern caved in beneath her feet.

Ridgely.—By the middle of next week, the large packing concern here, which has been handling beef for the State relief administration, will end its meat-packing season. Since October 19 the plant has averaged 48,000 cans of beef daily and has carried a weekly pay roll of approximately $3,000.

Hagerstown.—R. W. Barnes believes he has captured a specimen of the insect world's No. 1 public enemy—the black widow spider. Barnes said he captured the spider on his porch and examined it under a magnifying glass. Its size and markings, he said, indicate it is a member of the deadly species.

Franklin.—When Franklin residents complained articles were missing from their homes after a band of Gypsies settled near here, State police ordered five automobile loads of the roving nomads to vacate the town. The charge made against them was disturbance of the peace.

Covington Pastors Shun Murder Trial

Covington, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—The Ministerial Union here today telegraphed Judge Benjamin Haden urging a change of venue in the trial of Philip Jones and three other colored men, accused of the murder of two white girls near Clifton Forge, November 18. Fear of disorders was cited by the ministers in their wire as the reason for the request.

The telegram said: "In view of the possibility of public disorder, if the murder trial of four Negroes scheduled for December 10 in Covington is held in this town, we wish to urge strongly that change of venue be ordered if at all possible and that the prisoners not be brought here." Ten Protestant pastors here comprise the union.

A peculiar phase of West Virginia's statutes has been brought to light during an investigation at the State Industrial Home at Pruntytown. A woman in Terra Alta has filed suit against the institution to the effect that her son, a minor, had learned to chew tobacco which she claims was supplied by the State during his recent sojournment. Evidence unearthed shows that it is lawful for anyone over 16 in West Virginia to be given chewing tobacco while it is necessary for the would-be cigarette-smoker to have reached his twenty-first birthday.

Jack Brock, who lives near Big Laurel, Va., hasn't a goose that lays golden eggs, but he has got a houn' dog with a pretty good nose for silver. Not long ago the dog was burrowing under an old stump in the woods supposedly for a rabbit when Brock noticed something bright fly from the excavation. Brushing it off he found that he had a silver dollar bearing the date 1824.

Goldenlocks is not the only one that got into trouble with bears. John Lee, of Colonial Beach, Va., was fined $40 last week for the illegal possession of a bear. Although Lee asserted that he had been exhibiting his brown bear throughout the country, Game Warden D. T. Gray decided that it was a violation of the game laws. So it cost the defendant just $40 to learn that bears are subject to license control.

Residents of Dogtown, W. Va., have decided that such a name is entirely too plebeian a title for the community and are taking steps to have it changed. Being adjacent to Charleston, a committee of citizens is endeavoring to have the new name of "North Charleston" adopted.

Coombs Creek near Leonardtown, Md., has a gaunt reminder of the early days of prohibition in the hulk of a huge hydroplane speedboat, which was used to haul cargoes of illegal liquor at a 50-mile-per-hour pace in the lower Potomac waters. According to the story, the boat was trapped in one of the blind alcoves of the creek by Federal agents. Rather than have the Government take possession it was wrecked and abandoned.

Two Contracts Let in Virginia

Dern Also Approves Plans for West Virginia Bridge.

Secretary of War Dern yesterday announced the awarding of two Virginia contracts and approved plans for a bridge to be built over Buffalo Creek near Fairmont, W. Va.

The proposed dredging of the Potomac near Alexandria, Va., was awarded to the Norfolk Dredging Co., of Norfolk, Va. The contract calls for $43,102 worth of improvements for the navigation channel.

A steel oil barge to be used in the Norfolk, Va., area is to be furnished by Bethlehem Ship Building Corporation for $14,750.

Contract awards for the bridge near Fairmont, W. Va., have not been announced.

CCC Educator Lauds Program In Corps' Area

Dr. T. Gordon Bennett Says Effort 'University of the Woods.'

Westminster, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—Speaking to the student body of Western Maryland College yesterday, Dr. T. Gordon Bennett, educational adviser of the CCC camps in the Third Corps Area, described the five-point educational program of what he termed "the university of the woods."

Dr. Bennett said it provides for development of the CCC workers as follows: Building a healthy personality, moral, social and physical development; opportunity for broader thinking through lectures to counteract the "disgruntled talk heard on street corners;" essential factors of human relationships; actual knowledge, vocational and academic, and training for "leisure time" activities.

Dr. Bennett, who for 16 years was superintendent of public schools in Queen Anne and Calvert counties, pointed out that an educational program had been inaugurated in the Third Corps Area by Maj. Gen. Paul D. Malone and Col. Elvid Hunt prior to the appointment of the educators last January, and paid a tribute to the Army administration with the assertion that "no other group was so able or well qualified as the United States Army, to take care of the men in the CCC."

Dr. Bennett stressed the point that there was little difference between the assembled students and the CCC workers, except that the latter group had lacked certain opportunities. Dr. Bennett, a graduate of Western Maryland College in the class of 1909, praised the men in the CCC, and added that they were "not roughnecks or castaways, but good American boys from good American homes."

Dr. Bennett said that a report of CCC activities in the Third Corps Area, submitted in September, revealed that 22,000 men were attending lecture classes, with the average men voluntarily giving from one and a half to three hours of his leisure time each day to his educational advancement.

'Conductorette' In Baltimore Held For Relief Fraud

Baltimore, Dec. 4 (AP).—Mrs. Helen White, one of the few remaining street car "conductorettes" here, and her husband, William White, were arrested today on a charge of fraudulently obtaining $288 from the city relief commission.

A relief official said Mrs. White had been regularly employed at a weekly salary averaging $33.75. The relief checks were made out to her husband, but the relief official said the wife signed the original application.

Box Plant Sold At Winchester To Jersey Firm

Winchester, Va., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—Sale of the Shenandoah Box Board Corporation plant, located in this city, to the Kieckhefer Container Co., of Del Air, N. J., was confirmed today. The consideration as stated in the deed was $250,000.

L. J. Meunier, jr., vice president and general superintendent of the New Jersey concern, which has branches in a number of cities, in commenting upon the transaction said:

"We purchased the plant with the intention of operating it when business justifies. It will be closed down at least a month. If business conditions warrant, it will be reopened."

Sixty persons were on the payroll when the order to close was received. Today a skeleton force was completing the routine work.

Meanwhile, he said, there is a possibility that a factory for the manufacture of fruit boxes will be established. Local citizens are endeavoring to interest the new owners of the plant in the project.

"Whether a box factory is established depends upon the amount of business we may expect in that line. It is up to the citizens to show how much business we may expect," Mr. Meunier said.

State Grange Opens Parley At Frederick

Mayor Culler Welcomes Delegates; Program Outlined.

Frederick, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—About 200 grangers representing 67 subordinate units from all over the State attended the annual banquet of the sixty-seventh annual convention of the Maryland State Grange here tonight. The speakers were James A. McSparren, head of the Pennsylvania department of agriculture, and Dr. Raymond A. Pearson, president of the University of Maryland.

David H. Fry, Jefferson, Past Master of Pomona Grange, comprising nine units in Frederick and three in Washington County, extended greetings and Mayor Lloyd C. Culler welcomed the grangers with response by Thomas Roy Brooks, Belair, State master.

The opening session of the three-day convention began at the Francis Scott Key Hotel this morning, featured by the annual address of the State master, who recommended that a law be passed by the General Assembly in January providing for a substantial reduction of farms taxes, a graduated income tax to replace the general property tax, revision of the inheritance tax law so as to yield a greater return, reduction of public utility rates, more stringent regulation of bus and truck traffic as a means of public safety, adequate support of the public school system and State institutions, particularly the University of Maryland and the experiment station and extension service.

He referred to recommendations of the National Grange at its recent annual convention in the interest of agriculture and urged those applicable to Maryland.

Reports were made by masters of the Pomona bodies of Frederick, Washington, Baltimore, Caroline, Montgomery, Talbot, Carroll and Prince Georges counties.

The afternoon session was occupied by a report of the tax and executive committees.

Walt Mason Himself

A Little Sleep.

A little sleep, a little slumber, some folding of the hands, and all our woes, too great to number, slink off in beaten bands. Our waking life is sometimes rotten, its cares are dark and deep, but all these troubles are forgotten when we sink down in sleep. A while we dream of glade and spinny fanned by the scented breeze, where there is nothing cheap or tinny, and nothing hints of cheese. A while we wander in the valley where once we used to play, and smiling friends around us rally and pass the time away. We wander in remembered places we haunted long ago and there we see the dear old faces of friends we used to know. In dreamland's realm there is no sorrow, and we may smile and sing nor have the fear that bleak tomorrow will some disaster bring. There we are young and energetic, we are not age-worn men, and it is somber and pathetic that we must wake again. A little sleep, a little slumber, some closing of the eyes; gone are the troubles that encumber poor melancholy guys. Our silver mines have not been salted, but yield us ample jack; our bonds, in sleep, are not defaulted, the coupons don't come back. Our credit is a thing unbroken, it seems to be sky high, and many pleasant things are spoken when we go forth to buy. How sweet is sleep! We wouldn't care if we woke up never more; it's hard to wake and find the sheriff a-pounding at the door.

Casey Quits Harvard After His Worst Grid Season

New Mentor To Get Call At Once

Retiring Crimson Coach Was at Helm for Last 4 Years.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 4 (AP).—The resignation of Eddie Casey as head coach of the Harvard varsity football team has been accepted by the university's committee on the regulation of athletic sports, Lilliam J. Bingham, athletic director, anounced tonight. Casey has ben head coach for the last four years and during hte previous five years he served as back field coach and head freshman coach.

Casey's resignation, which has been expected daily since Harvard ended one of its most unsuccessful seasons with a Yale defeat 10 days ago, was acted upon during the regular monthly meeting of the committee last night. It had been one of the committee's strict rules to delay announcement of its actions for 24 hours.

Selection Soon.

After describing the committee's "deep regret to accede to Casey's wish to resign," Bingham said it would proceed at once to select his successor. The Harvard athletic director said that no announcement of the committee's plans would be made until the new head coach had been chosen. He declined to say whether or not the committee intended to abandon its graduate coaching policy.

"The committee on the regulation of Harvard athletic sports," its report said, "has accepted the resignation of Edward L. Casey, 1919, as head coach of the varsity football team. It voted with deep regret to accede to Casey's wish to resign."

Grid Deaths Off Sharply; 26 in '35

Only One College Boy Was Among Victims; One Prisoner.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—An auto thief doing a 4 to 6 year sentence in a Connecticut prison, a 9-year-old boy and 16 high school students were among the 26 players who lost their lives playing football this season, a compilation by the Associated Press today shows.

The death of John Daviduke, 24, as a result of injuries received in a game inside the walls of Hartford State Prison was the first among prison players since Warden Lewis E. Lawes, of Sing Sing, first made football a part of prison routine several years ago. William McGettigan, 9, of Darlington, Wis., was the youngest player to die, receiving an infection in a sandlot game.

High Point in 1931.

The death list, although still high in the high school classification, is below the totals for 1931, 1932 and 1933, the three previous years in which the Associated Press has kept records. The high point of all time was reached in 1931, when 50 died of football injuries. Rules changes and closer supervision of college and high school play cut the total down to 38 in 1932 and 36 last year, 10 of those in 1933 being listed in the "doubtful" class.

The total of 16 among high school students is the highest in that classification of the last three years and is an increase of five over 1933. The death of only one college player, however—that of Lawrence Froeliger, 20, of Arnold College, New Haven—marks a new low for the colleges and universities. Eight were killed in 1931. Froeliger received a broken neck making a tackle in a game with Northeastern University.

Thousands Play.

Although no accurate figures are available on just how many youngsters play the game each fall, it has been estimated by sports leaders and sports goods houses that at least 500,000 college and university men participate and more than twice that many in high schools and preparatory schools. Uncounted hundreds of thousands join in pickup games on back lots and in the streets, most of them with inadequate equipment or none at all.

A classification of the fatal injuries by the type of play in which they were suffered shows a majority incurred in making tackles. Of the 13 cases where such information was available, eight were killed while tackling another player, one while blocking and the other four as a result of being tackled.

Amateur Ball League Will Move Its Offices

Miami, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP).—Announcement that headquarters for the United States Amateur Baseball Association would be moved here from Springfield, Mass., has been made by Leslie Mann, general athletic director of the Miami Baseball School.

Mann said he had been invited by the association to organize and coach an all-star amateur baseball team to tour the Orient next fall, and that plans are going forward for perfecting details for State, sectional and national tournaments from which the best team would be selected for the trip.

Tulane Expects Full Strength For Owls

Tessier Brothers, Simons May Be Ready for Jan. 1 Contest.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 4 (AP).—Conditions indicate that Tulane will line up against "Pop" Warner's Temple Owls in the inaugural Sugar Bowl game here on New Year's Day with the strongest team the Green Wave has been able to assemble this season.

Tulane's famous brother act, George and Bob Tessier, two of the Wave's veteran starting linemen, will be back and ready to face the Owls, said "Monk" Simons, Tulane's trainer.

"Monk" is working on his son, "Little Monk" Simons, Tulane's star half back, who suffered a broken collarbone against Louisiana State last Saturday, and says "Little Monk" also will be ready for the bowl tilt.

Injured This Ytar.

The Tessiers, both mentioned on all-star teams throughout the South as juniors last season, have been unavailable for duty through injury for more than half of Tulane's season.

Fans here believe that with Bob Tessier back at his tackle position and George at guard, Tulane will have as strong a team as was sent out to the Rose Bowl in 1931 against Southern California.

Head Coach Tex Cox of Tulane has given his players a "week or ten days" before resuming training for Temple. Cox said his boys went through a terrific strain in theri game with Louisiana State last Saturday, in which the Green Wave won a thrilling victory from Huey Long's favored eleven, 13 to 12, and deserve a little rest.

Plans New Plays.

Cox, a former pupil of Bernie Bierman, who has guided Minnesota to the undisputed national championship this season, is doping out some news plays to flash against the Veteran Warner's traditional double-wing formations.

Tulane runs from the single-wing type of play, which was established here by Bierman, intermingled with an effective lateral pass hocus-pocus.

Welsh Gets No. 1 Parks Ranking

Honored in National List After Winning Title for the Year.

Mitchell Rated Fifth; Welsh, McElvenny 2d in Doubles.

BARNEY WELSH, the Rockville tennis star, has been ranked as the No. 1 national public parks player, according to the National Public Parks Tennis Association men's singles ratings announced yesterday, according to the Associated Press.

The former Duke University tennis captain won the public parks championship at Minneapolis last August. He defeated Arnold Simons, of Louisville, 1933 title holder, in the finals. Simons was ranked second to the Washington boy.

Two other Washington players were given rankings. Dennison (Dooley) Mitchell, former District champion, was given fifth place, and Ralph McElvenney, the transplanted California barrister, sixth.

Second in Doubles.

Welsh and McElvenney were ranked second in doubles.

The list will be submitted for approval to the U. S. L. T. A. at its February meeting in Cincinnati.

Welsh won virtually all of the important Washington tournaments this season. He brcke the monopoly Mitchell held for several years on the District championship, won the local public parks crown, and the event at Army and Navy.

Powerful Service.

He and Gilbert Hunt, rumer-up for the National Intercollegiates, are considered two of the best young tennis prospects in the District. Hunt has a powerful service, is an expert at volleying, is well versed in the art of placements, and is clever with the backhand and lobs.

Of particular interest to feminine tennis players here is the selection of Louis E. Hoffmeister, of Chicago, for fifth place in the women's singles.

The rankings in order:

C.; Scott Resinger and Gene Quinn, Chicago; Leo Kronman and Kaseal Peckoff, Buffalo; Robert Norton and Ted Heuerman, St. Louis; Arnold Simmons and Warfield Donohue, Louisville; Roy Huber and Martin Stein, St. Paul; Louis Lange and Douglas Watters, New Orleans; Walter Levitan and Maynard Weisberg, Boston; Charles Gilbert and William Larle, New York.

Creation of School of Athletics Recommended at Virginia U.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Dec. 4 ((AP)).—The creation of a school of Athletics and physical education at the University of Virginia with the consequent scrapping of the athletic council, the position's of director of athletic affairs was recommended today by a committee appointed by President John Lloyd Newcomb.

Reporting after a study of almost a year, this committee of six members brought back a report recommending the coordination of intercollegiate athletics, intramural athletics and physical education.

Although claiming "nothing particularly original or new" in plan, the committee asserted that it would place upon the university itself "full and complete responsibility for every department or activity that is conducted in the name of the institution. There, the committee unanimously agreed."

Anticipating criticism, the committee said it "realizes that neither the plan suggested nor any other plan will prove a panacea for certain difficulties and none-success in some branches of sport; nor will it insure the development of teams in those sports that will satisfy the lust of some of our alumni to win all contests in which we may participate."

On the committee, appointed by President Newcomb last January 2 with instructions to report back to the university's governing board, are William H. White, jr., chairman; George B. Eager, jr., James G. Driver, John N. Neff, Lawrence T. Ludwig and Christopher B. Garnett.

The proposed school of athletics and physical education, the committee suggested, would consist of three divisions, the division of intercollegiate athletics, the division of physical education and the division of intramural sports.

Each division would be headed by assistants to the "dean" of the school of athletics and physical education, who should have not only the title but the faculty rank and pay of a dean of the university. Each division head would be responsible directly to the dean, who in turn, would report to the president of the university.

Corresponding in its membership to the 3-3-3 council whose abolition the committee emphasized, would "act purely in an advisory capacity." The council would meet at the call of the president or the dean of the school of athletics and physical education. Three faculty members, three students and three alumni would compose this group.

Nats Shared '34 Feilding Honors

Tied Tigers for Lead in League With .974, Averages Show.

Led in Double Plays; Kamm Tops d Basemen for 8th Time.

FOR the eighth time since he came up from the Pacific Coast League, Willie Kamm, of Cleveland has won the third base fielding championship of the American League to shatter all major league records.

Kamm, never a great hitter, but the owner of a prize pair of hands and an uncanny fielding sense, won the third base defensive championship in 1934 with an average of .978, official figures released to the Associated Press revealed yesterday. As a member of the White Sox, Kamm won the same title from 1924 through 1929. He also won in 1933, breaking the major league mark once held in conjunction with Heinie Groh, thrid base fielding champion for six seasons.

The Cleveland star also holds the putout record for the American League, making 243 in 155 games during the 1928 season, and a share of the often-tied record of nine assists in one game.

Hildur Prince Scores at Fair Grounds, Giving Cortellety First Winning Mount

J. Madonia's A La Carte Second

Victor Returns $4.60; Good Weather Draws Large Crowd.

FAIR GROUNDS, New Orleans, Dec. 4 (AP).—Sunshine and moderating weather brought out a larger crowd and furnished a track that was almost fast at the Fair Grounds this afternoon, and an improved program saw a better class of racing.

The Pone-Chartrain Purse, at a mile and a sixteenth, was the headliner. It was won rather easily by the lightly weighted Hildur Prince, owned by C. Troutt and carrying Apprentice B. Cortellety, of Milwaukee, to the first success of his career. He rode a good race, rating his mount like a veteran.

Hildur Prince, away well, was able to race wtih the pace under double wraps and his 94-pound impost bothering him none at all, he drew away from J. Madonia's A La Carte at his leisure and drew out in the stretch to win by three lengths.

Tries to Respond.

A La Carte, hard held in the early stages to prevent him from running out, tried to respond to hard urging when straightened out in the stretch, but his 114-pound package anchored him. He stood off A. J. Halliwell's Pan Toy to hold second place, however.

Hilbur Prince paid $4.60 for $2, but was not a favorite. A La Carte ruled a slight choice over him.

The race was run in 1:47 4-5, attesting to the improvement of the track since yesterday.

Brown Ray, owned by M. Ryan and ridden by Joe Jacobs, rewarded those who backed him into odds-on favoritism in the first race by "coming from the clouds" to win that 6 furlongs event rather handily. He ran over the leaders and was safe from the rush of Persuader, a fielder, which also finisher strong. Precocious was third, Brown Ray paid $3.60 for $2.

L. J. Sandrock's Fortunate Youth, second choice, had little trouble taking down the purse in the second race, though his margin at the end of the 6 furlongs dash was just a length. Ralph Whittaker had him well, took command from Little Marcelle and coasted home with a reef or two still in folds. Paper Profits, odds-on favorite, was third. Dodiodo delayed the start more than ten minutes. Fortunate Youth returned $5.60 for $2.

Mueller, favorite, had to be much the best to win the third race which was at five and a half furlongs. Jockey T. Vercher persevered with him, however, and brought him around the leaders after entering the stretch to land the colors of A. J. Halliwell winner over Magna Mater, which had raced Judge Primrose into defeat and which held on well in the drive. Judge Primrose lasted to be third. Mueller paid $5 for $2.

Rickey Roo Scores.

A second choice because of heavy support for Levi Cook, Rickey Roo, a gelding from the Berman Stable, won the fourth race from flagfall to finish. J. Ketry had him away fast and Rickey Roo, cutting out a fast pace, won with speed in reserve. All Bays came from far back to be second and Shady Past was third. Levi Cook was beaten off. The winner paid $5.00 for $2.

I. E. Burnnett's Demagogue made a runaway of the sixth race to win his second purse in as many starts at the meeting. Jockey G. Fowler sent him into a long lead in the first quarter of the mile and furlong race, and, though he was compelled to shake Demagogue up in the stretch, he still had a three lengths' lead at the wire over Blind Hills, which passed out Brass Buttons for second place. Demagogue was an even money favorite.

The last race at a mile and a sixteenth brought the first disqualification. Jockey G. Mills had the leg on Ormontime, and, bringing the old gelding down the middle of the track, he sent him to the front with a rush at the last furlong, but Ormontime, before clearing Mrs. I. O. Taylor's Sedgie, swerved over on him and forced Sedgie to pull up. Sedgie held second place and Yarnallton was third, both moving up when Ormontime was disqualified, while Luke Connell was given third place. Sedgie paid $8.40 for $2. Jockey Mills was suspended 20 days by the stewards for the foul.

Jimmy King turned the 4-year-old mare wide as they entered the stretch, and she came from behind to win from Chatterfol. Rizla paid $12.90 to place and $7.00 to show. Semester, the favorite, was third, paying $3.10.

Sellout Predicted for Alabama-Stanford

Stanford University, Calif., Dec. 4 (AP).—Belief the New Year's Day Rose Bowl game between Alabama and Stanford would be "a sellout or near capacity attendance" was expressed by Alfred Masters, Stanford graduate manager.

"Ticket orders are coming in so fast the clerk of the Pasadena office telephone here asking for more help to take care of the rush," Masters said. "Alabama University telegraphed for 2,000 tickets, which assures us of full rooting sections. Early indications point to a capacity crowd of 84,000."

Stocks Renew Advances in Lively Trading

Rails Lead in Recovery as Sales Mount to 950,950 Shares.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Livelier and more confident financial markets brightened today's trading and investment horizons.

In stocks the principal encouragement to proponents of the advance was given by a substantial recovery in the recently backward rails. The dollar also maintained its ascending trend in foreign exchange dealings.

The day was a happy one for those who have been broadcasting the upturn in business and industry and predicting a further advance toward more prosperous times. There were a host of extra, special and regular dividends. Governmental analysts estimated Christmas buying would be the best since 1930 and increases of production in steel and electric power were foreseen by economic observers.

Some Fail to Follow.

While many stocks failed to follow the example of the rails, aircrafts and scattered specialties, they at least held their ground. There were a number of moderate losses recorded, but these were not deemed of great importance by the majority of market commentators.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected issues managed to regain seven-tenths of its one-point loss of the previous session. This composite closed at 75.4. Transfers totaled 950,950, or about 200,000 above yesterday's aggregate.

The share list was enlivened in the morning by a burst of activity in the aviation division. United Aircraft edged up to a new high for the year and Wright Aeronautical, Aviation Corporation and Boeing got up fractionally to around 2 points. Hopes for a friendlier Governmental attitude toward the air companies and indications of greatly improved aerial traffic aided these stocks.

Rails Take Lead.

The flying corps did not hold its lead long. It was soon passed by the rails. Carrier gainers of around New York Central, Union Pacific, 1 to 2 points included Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, Delaware & Hudson and Pennsylvania. Extra and special dividends were voted by J. C. Penny, General Printing Ink and International Printing Ink and these issues spurted about 2 points each. Some of the communications shares reflected optimism over the Federal hearings on proposals to consolidate the telegraph companies.

American Telephone, Western Union, International Telephone and Postal Telegraph preferred advanced fractionally to around 2 points.

Others Among Gainers.

Others, up as much, included United States Steel, Bethlehem Steel, United States Industrial Alcohol, Reynolds Tobacco B, American Sugar Refining, Worthington Pump and Westinghouse. Worthington Pump preferred A and B jumped about 3 and 2 points, respectively. A number of other preferred issues brought much higher prices on small turnovers.

The markets, generally, appeared to be impressed with the announcement that the Treasury was swamped with subscriptions for its new cash offering of $900,000,000 of bonds and notes. The success of this low-interest financing served to recall to the speculative, as well as investment, forces that idle funds in this country are at their highest point in history and that, ultimately, some of this money may lap over into equities.

Grains came back after a bad start and wheat, corn, oats and rye ended with gains of a cent or so a bushel. Cotton was 5 cents a bale lower to 30 cents higher. The British pound lost about a cent in terms of the dollar and the gold currencies were the heaviest in some weeks.

Money Market

Foreign Exchange.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Foreign exchange easy. Great Britain in dollars, others in cents.

Observer Finds That Repercussions Following a Return of Saar Territory to Germany Could Be Calmed Without Any Disturbing Financial Effects.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

New York, Dec. 4.—There has been some concern in interested circles over the financial repercussion of a return of the Saar territory to Germany, and the settlements that would have to be made with the French government and foreign creditors at such time. On careful analysis, however, it appears that these settlements should be arranged without any disturbing effects, despite the present inability of Germany herself to make any substantial payments abroad, owing to her import surplus and the virtual disappearance of gold and foreign exchange reserves in the Reichsbank.

In point of fact, certain close observers have come to the conclusion that Germany would be better off financially as a result of the return of the Saar basin to her, and that her ability to make payments abroad would be somewhat increased for a time as a result, should the plebiscite run in her favor, as seems virtually certain.

Under a tentative agreement already reached and announced, Germany agrees to pay 900,000,000 francs, or about $59,400,000 in cash, in addition to deliveries of 11,000,000 tons of coal, for the mines and the credits advanced by France to the Saar. After their experience with reparation payments, France is not ready to assume any transfer risks for this sum, but it has been announced that ways and means of assuring this payment already have been arranged.

French Currency Circulates In Saar, Survey Reveals.

For more than ten years French currency has been circulating in the Saar, and there are also considerable deposits there in branches of French banks or in local banks stated in francs. If one were to assume that the average currency circulating in the Saar is about the same as in France, there would be about 1,800 francs per capita. With a population of 830,000, this would mean about 1,500,000,000 francs for the territory, or much more than the 900,000,000 francs required to pay the French in cash for the coal mines. This is outside the francs that will come into the possession of Germany when existing foreign exchange restrictions are applied to the bank deposits or other foreign exchange assets of Saar citizens, who would become German citizens with the transfer of the territory to German sovereignty.

If the Saar is returned to Germany, the reichsmark will be adopted as the circulating medium. The Reichsbank, therefore, will substitute its own notes for the notes of the Bank of France now in circulation. This expansion in Reichsbank note circulation would not embarrass it in any way, since the minimum gold reserve requirements of that institution has been suspended and certain German internal securities may be used as collateral against circulating notes. Part of the Bank of France notes thus received by the Reichsbank can be turned over in the German government as payment for its obligations, which would be used as security for the new riechsmark notes. The German government could thus obtain the wherewithal to pay for the mines and credits in francs.

Of course, a considerable flight of capital is taking place from the Saar, which will reduce the amount of francs that the Reichsbank will be able to take over when the territory comes under Germany sovereignty. On the other hand, the territory is relatively rich, so that per capita currency in circulation and the volume of bank deposits that remain are doubtless considerably larger than the average for France as a whole.

As a result, if the Saarlanders vote to return to Germany on January 13 of next year, there is no reason to anticipate that a transfer problem will arise. Rather, conversion of franc currency and deposits into Reichsbank liabilities should furnish the German government sufficient funds to pay off the French and have a substantial balance in addition.

Loans of Saar Territory Payable in Foreign Money.

There is the further problem, however, of dealing with foreign obligations contracted by the Saar during the period it was under League of Nations control. Several loans of the Saar territory are payable in foreign currencies, including bond issues stated in dollars sold in this country. The Saar governing commission last reported to the Council of the League of Nations that the balance outstanding of such long-term loans authorized by it aggregated $2,900,000 and £890,000. Since the Saar will become subject to the various foreign exchange restrictions and transfer moratoria effective in Germany in the event of a shift in sovereignty, the commission has called the attention of the League of Nations to possible adverse effects on foreign creditors.

No announcement has been made of how this situation will be met, but Saar bonds have been firm in price. There is a general expectation in interested quarters that foreign currency debts of the Saar and its political subdivisions will be handled in the same manner as the debt to the French government arising out of the transfer of coal mines, since the Reichsbank, and through it the German government, will become possessed of large amounts of foreign exchange by application of existing laws of the Reich to this territory.

Bonds Climb Two-Tenths as Sales Jump

Transfers Are Largest in More Than Month, Totaling $15,074,000.

New York, Dec. 4 ((AP)).—With a strong Government list as a background, corporate bonds of most all classes moved into higher ground today in the heaviest turnover in more than a month.

Transfers aggregated $15,074,000 par value, the first time since November 1 that sales had crossed the $15,000,000 mark, and compared with $10,541,000 on Monday.

The Government turnover was $3,910,000 against $2,170,000. The Standard Statistics Company average of 60 domestic corporate bonds advanced two-tenths of a point to 85.4, the highest since last July 24.

New Issue at Premium.

The 1⅛ per cent notes got as high as 100 21-32, against initial sales of 100 16-32, and the 3⅛s sold at 101 4-32 before the close, after opening at 100 26-32.

Strength in other Treasury issues carried most of them 5-32 to 26-32 higher, and Home Owners Loan and Federal Farm Mortgage bonds gained 1-32 to 5-32.

The speculative demand for railroad securities spread from stocks into bonds of the secondary class with gains of a point or more shown by obligations of Baltimore & Ohio, Central Pacific, St. Paul, Rock Island, Cuba Railroad, El Paso & Southwestern, Great Northern, New York Central, New Haven and Southern Railway. Toledo, St. Louis & Western 4s were 6 points higher at 87.

On Gaining List.

In other sections of the list prices generally moved higher, although trading activity was not great, and there were isolated instances of declines. Postal Telegraph 5s were taken in large volume and advanced ¾ of a point to 43½ coincident with the communications hearing in Washington.

Crown Zellerbach 6s were 2 higher at 97 and Paramount Publix 5½s gained a point to 60½. Kelly Springfield 6s yielded 1½ points to 37½, New York Dock 5s were 1⅛ lower at 59, and Atlanta Gulf & West Indies 5s sold 1½ lower at 46½.

Gossip of New York Markets

By G. A. Phillips.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—With the Nation daily becoming more "housing" minded and two Government bureaus in keen competition to take the lead in inaugurating a gigantic building campaign, one of the largest division of the durable goods industries is believed by the financial district to have extremely bright prospects for an early revival.

The recent differences between James A. Moffett, Federal Housing Administrator, and Harold L. Ickes, head of the PWA, over the question of Government financed housing might have caused Presidential frowns, but it can not be denied that it brought smiles and cheers from leaders of the sorely harassed building industry because it gave an insight into the scope of the administration's plans.

While an accurate survey of replacement needs for new buildings is rendered extremely difficult by the extent of the territory and diversity of purposes for which commercial structures have been erected, a clearer picture can be had in the residential division where effective replacement demand is concentrated at the moment and promises to continue for some time.

On the basis of Government survey's the Standard Statistics Co. has estimated that, of the 16,000,000 homes in this country now in need of repair, 3,000,000 are beyond rehabilitation and should be rebuilt. While low incomes and depleted savings are expected to exercise considerable restraint on owners who desire to replace these dwellings, it is expected that further improvement in the general economic situation will enable a moderately large number to begin work in the near future and provide the groundwork for enormous expansion in the building industry along with the Government's slum-clearance projects.

Should the annual average of new dwelling units constructed over the next 5 years be only 300,000 throughout the country, and replacement costs reach the modest sum of but $5,000 each, the addition to residential building contract awards would, it is estimated be in the neighborhood of $1,500,000,000 a year, or $7,500,000,000 during the period.

If the work on the remaining 14,500,000 homes in need of repair is spread over the next 5 years at an annual expenditure of $300 per home, which is also considered modest, the outlay for labor and materials should approximate $870,000,000 annually, or $4,350,000,000 for the 5 years.

Together, these two estimates indicate potential replacement in the residential field will amount to approximately $12,000,000,000 and does not, of course, take into consideration the large volume of public works now being undertaken by the Federal, State, and City Governments, and the much-needed modernization of office buildings and hotels.

Wheat Rallies As Corn Again Moves Higher

Cotton Turns Irregular; Closes Barely Steady, 1 Point Off to 6 Up.

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—A sharp rally in the grain market wiped out early losses in both wheat and corn today, advancing prices for net gains of fractions to more than a cent a bushel.

Buoyancy in the wheat pit was attributed to fresh indications of widespread and heavy feeding of this grain to live stock despite the fact that production of wheat as well as corn was far below normal this year.

Strength in securities also aided in improving sentiment, and on the upturn reinstatement of lines sold out earlier and some short covering added to the weight of buying orders.

Profit taking on a week's gain of 4 cents in corn and 2 cents in wheat in addition to selling influenced by heavy deliveries on December contracts of wheat weakened the market considerably at the outset, but the liquidation soon spent itself. Trade broadened toward the session's close.

Much comment was heard regarding the probable amount of wheat likely to be fed this winter due to pronounced corn scarcity in many sections of the live stock producing area, particularly where corn is the more expensive grain. According to a leading authority around 88,000,000 bushels of wheat might be consumed in this way compared with 75,000,000 last year.

Cotton Market

Cotton futures fluctuated irregularly today, easing in the late trading under liquidation and Southern selling. The close was barely steady net 1 point lower to 6 points higher.

Early gains of 6 to 8 points attracted selling which forced December down to 12.34 and May to 12.43.

Closing prices were within a point or two of the lowest except for October, which, after selling off to 12.08, closed at 12.12.

The steadier tone of October, which closed only 25 points below July, compared with a difference of 31 points yesterday, was attributed to buying by trade interests.

Exports today, 21,032, making 1,992,733 so far this season. Port receipts, 18,612. United States port stocks, 3,161,122.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil turned firm today, closing 7 to 9 points net higher on sales of 90 contracts. A higher market for lard combined with a decidedly better demand from commission houses with Southern and Western connections, and a rally in grains were the principal factors in the upturn. Crude oil sold again at 9 cents at all Southern points. Bleachable spot nominal; December closed 9.90; January, 9.96; March, 10.06; May, 10.17; July, 10.27.

National City Bank Points To Upturns

New York, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—A definite upturn among principal industries in fall and winter business was pointed out today by the National City Bank of New York in its monthly bulletin.

"In general, the situation shows that the chief industries have passed through the resting period and entered the upturn or will soon do so," it stated.

"The optimists have had a little the better of it in the returns during the past month. * * * The gains are moderate and both current policies and expectations for the winter month continue conservative.

Pessimism Found Extreme.

"However, the improvement shows that the pessimistic opinions as to the fall and winter outlook, which were widely entertained at the beginning of the season, were unnecessarily extreme."

The bulletin outlines conditions in key industries and indicates improvement shown in steel, wool manufacturing, department store sales, automobile sales, cotton goods market and a good demand for silk and rayon.

Gains in retail trade, the survey says, have not been made easily.

Along Eastern Seaboard.

"Along the Eastern seaboard particularly the gains have been concentrated in the stores making strong sales efforts, based on price appeal.

"This is but one of the many indications of low purchasing power which keeps business men in a conservative frame of mind, but it prompts the observation that there is no way to improve trade except by making prices to fit the consumer's pocketbook, and no way to bring lasting progress out of the depression except by general cooperation of that end."

The letter states trade has turned to the Federal Government for an important indication of future business conditions.

"Relief payments and other emergency expenditures * * * are large enough to represent the difference between good and bad trade," the bank said.
